IT is long since religious controversy began. The first quarrel that arose in the human family was about religion; and since the proclamation “I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed, “the controversy has been carried on by different hands, by different means, and with various success. It is the duty of the Christian, and has ever been the duty of the saint, to contend for the truth revealed, in opposition to error. From the days that Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, down to the present time, every distinguished saint has been engaged in controversy. The ancient prophets, the Saviour of the world, and his holy apostles, were all religious controversialists. The Saviour's life was one continued scene of controversy and debate with the scribes, the elders, the Pharisees, the sadducees, and with the established priesthood of his era. The apostles were noted disputants, and the most successful controversialists that ever lived. Paul, the apostle, was more famous in this department than Alexander, or Bonaparte, in the field. Whether a Stoic, or an Epicurean philosopher, a Roman orator, a Jewish high priest, or a Sadducean teacher encountered him, he came off victorious and triumphant. Never was he foiled in battle; never did he give back. The sword which he wielded, and the arm which directed it, proved resistless in the fight.

There are not a few who deprecate religious controversy as an evil of no small magnitude. But these are either the ill-informed, or those conscious that their principles will not bear investigation. So long as there is good and evil, truth and error, in this world, so long will there be opposition; or it is in the nature of good and evil, of truth and error, to oppose each other. We cheerfully confess that it is much to be regretted that controversy amongst Christians should exist; but it is more to be regretted that error, the professed cause of it, should exist. Seeing then that controversy must exist, the only question is, how may it be managed to the best advantage? To the controversies recorded in the New Testament we must appeal, as furnishing an answer to this question. They were in general public, open, plain, and sometimes sharp and severe. But the disputants who embrace the truth in those controversies, never lost the spirit of truth in the heat of conflict; but with all calmness, moderation, firmness, and benevolence, they wielded the sword of the spirit; and their controversies when recorded by impartial hands, breathe a heavenly sweetness, that so refreshes the intelligent reader, that he often forgets the controversy, in admiration of the majesty of truth, the benevolence and purity of their hearts.

In the following pages, there is detailed a controversy of seven days on a question which to some may appear of very subordinate importance, but, in fact, of very great magnitude, if we view all its bearings and consequences. The substance of the debate is, we believe, faithfully presented, and not one argument., or principal topic of illustration, or proof, left out, or intentionally withheld. Indeed, to say nothing of the honesty of our motives, our interest and our reputation demand that the debate should be faithfully and impartially exhibited. Our interest is to convince the reader that our views are correct; now if we either suppressed an argument, or presented it in a weaker form than our opponent did, or than the reader himself would conceive of, we, in that instance, injure ourselves; for so long as the reader thinks that he could have advanced something stronger, so long he resists the evidence adduced. Our reputation too is at stake. A very numerous and respectable congregation heard this discussion, and although there were many enlisted on both sides, yet the number of those that belonged to neither party was very respectable. These were the only umpires, and their testimony is of much more influence in matters of this nature than either friends or opponents.

With regard to the length of the speeches on both sides, it is necessary to inform those who did not hear the debate, that I pronounced more words in a given time than my opponent. I think it will be granted, on all sides, that I pronounced as many words in twenty minutes as he did in thirty. There is not, however, this disparity in the speeches as published, for a greater portion of what I said is abbreviated than of what he said. And as the topics which we were pledged to discuss were chiefly taken up in the first five days, we have given the arguments of those days in great length, abbreviating only such matter as had little or no bearing upon the subject; such as the argument from ecclesiastic history, the origin of modern sects, and such matter as Mr. Maccalla introduced having no bearing upon the controversy whatever. Of this the reader will have a full specimen in the sixth and seventh days.

The correspondence which resulted in this discussion is fully printed in this work, and is itself the best preface to the volume. It not only fitly introduces the debate, but it also serves to corroborate the correctness of the narrative given, inasmuch as the ground proposed by Mr. Maccalla, and the topics presented in his own letters, are such as appear in my statement of the debate. Indeed his letters are letters of recommendation to this work as being faithful and correct. The matter, and style of his letters, the views which they exhibit, the spirit which they breathe, admirably correspond with his side of the argument, if we only subtract one consideration, viz. that Mr. Maccalla's talent consists much more in that kind of management and address, that kind of adroitness and etiquette which is manifest in his letters, than in strength of argument, or biblical knowledge,

It would be, perhaps, unbecoming and unnecessary to say any thing about the talents or acquisitions of my opponent. His own letters shew that he was competent, and his speeches evince that his industry and research were adequate, to the task proposed, if his cause had been tenable. But it requires more than Herculanean strength to bring something out of nothing. Had Mr. Macalla been on my side, and I on his, doubtless I should have been put to confusion; for I remember to have been vanquished by an old lady when I argued up infant baptism against her. It is true I had something to say, and held on stoutly to the last, but I felt in my own heart that I was defeated; and what mortified me no little, was, that with all my philosophy and divinity, an old woman's common sense overpowered me.

It may be necessary to inform the reader, that being in the habit of reading and using different translations of the scriptures, as well as sometimes translating for myself, he may sometimes find quotations in this book, even where the authorities are not adduced, which may differ from the common version. We believe, however, that in every instance where any great emphasis was laid upon any difference of translation, either the authority is given, or the translation defended. If it be at any time otherwise, we are not at present conscious of it.

The style adopted in the following speeches is, we believe, little or nothing better than that in which they appeared upon the stage. On my part they were extemporaneous, as all my public addresses are; and therefore the style is of the familiar and diffuse character, such as might be expected from a person who did not know, until the evening before the discussion, whether he was to open the debate or to respond; whether he or his opponent was to introduce the matter to be discussed. My health, too, for some time before, and during the debate, as well as through the greater part of the winter, was peculiarly delicate, so as to forbid much close thinking or close application to my pen. It moved in my fingers with very little regard to elegancies; and as I sometimes felt doubtful whether I should live to accomplish this work, I was more concerned about the matter than about the manner, about what I published than about the style in which it should appear. But as I had reason of grateful thanksgiving for the improvement of my health, during the seven days of the discussion, so also I have abundant reason of gratitude and praise to HIM in whom we live, and move, and have our being, for a similar, or greater improvement, during the time that I have been employed in writing it. I hope, however, the style will be plain and intelligible to all.

We feel glad to know that Mr. Maccalla has been preaching very generally on this subject since the debate, in order, as he says, that the people of “all denominations may have a specimen of the contrast which I know will be seen between my real arguments and the spurious production now in the press, “and that these preachings have been notified in the public prints by Mr. Maccalla, as being “on the existence of a visible church in the family of Abraham, and the ecclesiastical identity of the Jewish and Christian societies; “because we have no doubt, but, in so doing, he has been obtaining for this work additional evidences of its correctness; being assured that every argument he can urge on these topics, with its proof, will be found precisely stated in his speeches in this volume: and also all those arguments, which indeed are substantially the same with his, used by Mason, Pond, Campbell, Ralston, and Walker, on the same subjects. It will be evident to the impartial reader, that, if the whole of this work were a forgery, it combats every argument advanced by the Pedobaptists; and if the arguments impugned in this volume are refuted, he may rest assured that there are no others to exhibit. So that whether it represents the debate correctly or incorrectly, it is all one as respects the merits of the question. These things we urge, knowing the opposition that will be made from what has been said before the book is laid before the public. We know that every umpire that heard the discussion, and those who were on the other side when the debate commenced, but who were convinced by hearing it, that infant sprinkling is a human tradition, and we have no doubt but that even some of those who are still Pedobaptists, will concur with us in declaring, that it is as fair and full a representation of the controversy, as four hundred pages of these dimensions could exhibit.

We have only to remind the reader that there is but one infallible standard of the Christian religion, and this is the New Testament. To this let him ever appeal as the supreme judge of all controversies about Christian faith and practice. By this standard let our arguments be tried, his views guided, and his conscience ruled. And if unlearned, in the science and philosophy of men, let him remember that those Rev. Philosophers who composed the Westminster Confession of Faith declare, that the scriptures are so plain, “that not only the learned but the unlearned, by a due use of the ordinary means, may attain to a sufficient understanding of them. “May every student of this sacred volume grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ!

A. Campbell.
Mr. CAMPBELL,—The subject of this communication is your publication on baptism, and particularly your proclamation to the multitude at the close of your debate on Mount Pleasant. It is found in the last paragraph of the 144th page of your book, entitled, “Infant sprinkling proved to be a human tradition. “You there say, “I conceive it is my time to give an imitation or challenge to any Pedobaptist minister; and to return the compliment with the utmost ceremoniousness, I this day publish to all present, that I feel disposed to meet any Pedobaptist minister of any denomination, of good standing in his party, and I engage to prove, in a debate with him, other vica voce, or with the pen, that infant sprinkling is a human tradition, and injurious to the well being of society, religious and political. I have to add, that I must have an equal vote in determining the time, and place. This is the only restriction I attach to the challenge. I now publish.”

Some copies of your book came to this village immediately after its publication. As the topics which it discusses had been matter of controversy amongst us, those who espouse your opinions set on foot a plan, (as I was informed,) to procure a visit from you, for the purpose of encountering me in public debate. What was the cause of their failure I cannot tell: but rumours of your intending to visit this country, and probably this place, are lately renewed, and I am encouraged by your friends to hope that a letter from me might accelerate such an event. The anxiety which they manifest for our meeting appears like a call of Providence for me to solicit your approach, which, in other circumstances, my conscious weakness and natural timidity might cause me to deprecate. If, however, you should gratify our wishes, it is not necessary that you should consider this as a challenge, but only as an acceptance of your invitation copied above. Nothing more was needed from me, after the publication of a general challenge by yourself.
iliary, doctrinal or historical. A second is, that they be clothed in language every way suitable; possessing the qualities of purity, propriety, and precision. The third is, that the question or questions be so stated as to preclude equivocation, if possible, and bring the parties directly to an issue; so that one can affirm and the other deny, or if both agree, one shall be considerably the gainer. In the pursuit of these objects, (as far as circumstances would permit, ) I have drafted the following questions, which are now respectfully submitted for your consideration, and (if you please, ) for your adoption or rejection, amendment or selection, enlargement or diminution,

1. Were Abraham and his seed divinely constituted a true church of God?
2. Is the Christian church a branch of the Abrahamic church? or, in other words, Are the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, one and the same church in different dispensations?
3. Are Jewish circumcision before Christ, and Christian baptism after Christ, one and the same seal in substance, though in different forms?
4. The administration of this seal to infants; was it once enjoined by divine authority?
5. Is it now prohibited by the same authority?
6. Do the Jews baptize the infant offspring of proselytes on the profession of the parents?
7. Did they practise this in the time of John the Baptist?
8. Did they learn their proselyte baptism from the Christian church?
9. Is John's baptism Christian baptism?
10. Are the American baptists descended from John? or, in other words, have they obtained their baptism from him by uninterrupted
11. Are the American baptists descended from the German Anabaptists? or, in other words, have they obtained their baptism from Munzer?
12. Did John baptize infants?
13. Did John baptize by submersion?
14. Does the Bible authorize the baptism of infants as a Christian ordinance?
15. Has the church of Christ always practised the baptism of infants as a Christian ordinance?
16. Does the Bible authorise the church to consider submersion essential to baptism?
17. Has the church of Christ always considered submersion essential to baptism?
18. Is the administration of the initiatory seal of the church to infants injurious to the well being of society, religious and political?
19. Is sprinkling, when used as a mode of baptism, injurious to the well-being of society, religious and political?
20. Is the exclusion of infants from the church hurtful to society?
21. Is the exclusive practice of submersion, as a mode of baptism, hurtful to society?
To all these questions I can conscientiously answer with a direct affirmative or negative, and you could do the same. From your publication of the debate at Mount Pleasant, I fairly conclude that (unless suppressed by mutual consent,) they will all be discussed if we should ever meet. The most orderly method of discussion will be the most expeditious and edifying. The terms of conference may, I hope, be precisely, if not easily, adjusted, should Providence bring us together. I am admonished by a friend of yours, to use no equivocation in assuring you that a meeting is now expected, either according to this letter or some other plan. Evidence of unwillingness on your part will be considered as a withdrawal of your challenge. Having asked advice of God my Redeemer, to Him do I now commit this affair.

W. L. MACCALLA.

Mr. MACCALLA,

SIR,—Your favour of the 17th ult. came to hand about two weeks since. Though I was pleased with the style and spirit of your epistle, yet having never before heard of the writer, I thought it necessary to ascertain of what character and standing he might be, before I should make any reply. In the midst of my inquiries on this subject, I received a letter from Dr. Keith of your town, informing me of your “high standing” in the Presbyterian denomination, and of your general character. Dr. Keith's account was also confirmed by the testimony of a Mr. Logan from your vicinity and a respectable member of your community, who favoured me with a visit. Being now satisfied on the above subject of inquiry, and being convinced that it is my duty to meet you, in public debate, on the subject proposed, I inform you that I most cheerfully consent to meet you as aforesaid.

The challenge to which you refer, necessarily grew out of the circumstances which accompanied its first promulgation. I was drawn into a discussion by a challenge from a Pedobaptist. Having seen that Pedobaptist confuted; generosity, candour, and the triumph of truth, suggested the propriety of giving an opportunity to any other Pedobaptist teacher, of coming forward to take Mr. Walker's side of the controversy, if he thought he could make better of it. His side of the controversy was comprised in one short proposition; viz.” that-infant baptism or affusion is a divine institution.” The side which I assumed, from conviction, was comprised in the negative of this proposition; viz. “that infant Baptism or affusion is not a divine institution,” but a human tradition. This, I think, I then proved. I am ready, however, to do it again on any other ground that may or can be taken. The simple question to be discussed, divested of every thing extraneous, is this, Is infant affusion, or, as it sounds sweeter to a Pedobaptist ear—Is infant baptism a divine institution? Mr. Walker said yes; I said, and still say, no. I say it is a human tradition, and injurious to society, &c.

As to the place, time, and manner of proceeding in the proposed discussion, I would observe, first, with regard to the place, that reason.
and equity suggest that it should be equidistant from you and me. I have no business to Kentucky more than to any part of the Union; yet, on certain conditions, I am willing to go to Augusta.

With respect to the time, I think it ought not to be sooner than two or three months after we have agreed upon the preliminaries; i. e. it should be published in all the circumjacent country for so long a time. And, as respects the manner of procedure, I would say, I have no objection to take up and discuss the questions you have proposed, or to any other you may please to propose, provided that I have the liberty of proposing an equal number. But in order to facilitate and expedite an agreement on the preliminaries, I will take the liberty of suggesting the following, which I conceive to be perfectly reasonable, and of course equitable:—

1. That Mr. W. L. Maccalla agrees to attempt to prove that infant affusion or baptism is a divine institution, and A. Campbell agrees to attempt to prove that it is not; in a public debate, to be held, if the Lord will, at Augusta.

2. That each of the parties shall choose one person to act as moderator, and that these two shall choose a third, who is neither a Baptist nor a Pedobaptist, to sit with them.

3. That these moderators shall merely keep order, and not pronounce judgment on the merits of the debate.

4. Each speaker shall speak thirty minutes without interruption, if he wish to speak so long; if not, he is free to stop when he pleases.

5. Mr. W. L. Maccalla, as he supports the affirmative, necessarily opens the debate, and A. Campbell closes it.

6. The scriptural subject of baptism shall first be discussed, then the action of baptism.

7. The debate shall be conducted with decorum; all improper allusions and passionate language shall be guarded against.

8. Whatever books are produced on the occasion shall be equally accessible to the use of each disputant.

9. The discussion shall be continued from day to day until the people are satisfied, or until the moderators agree that enough has been said on the topic.

These are substantially, and some of them formally, the same with those agreed upon by a committee at Mount Pleasant, previous to that debate. If you agree to these, the preliminaries are settled, and you may immediately publish the place and time of holding the said debate, and pleas, inform me by return of mail. I will then furnish you with an equal number of questions to those you have proposed, for your consideration, that you may have the fullest time for reflection. You have my consent, if you please, to call to your aid, any of your Pedobaptist brethren in the ministry. I wish to convince or to be convinced. As truth is my riches, the more I gain of it the richer and the happier I must be. Moreover, I shall feel a great obligation to you if you convince me of any error. I hope, therefore, you will spare no pains in your efforts to convince me. You may rest assured that you will find me open to conviction, and anxious to maintain what I believe.

A. CAMPBELL.
Mr. McCALLA.

SIR,—I wrote you on the 16th ultimo, an answer to your favour of May last. I also directed a letter on the game subject to Dr. Keith. To these communications I have received no reply. A letter having been due before this date, I feel anxious to know whether my letter was received, and whether you have answered it. I would send a copy of my reply per the bearer, but time forbids, as he is now on his way. You will please inform me, on Mr. Logan's arrival, whether my letter was received. And if you should have written a reply, at a date authorising me to have received it, you must consider your letter as miscarried, and will, therefore, have the goodness to write again, as my business and arrangements require me to know the result as soon as possible.

Respectfully yours, &c. A. CAMPBELL.

Augusta.

Mr. CAMPBELL,

YOUR letter of the 14th inst. sent by Mr. Logan, was received yesterday at church, and of course not opened until this morning. If my former one had obtained as speedy a passage as this of yours, it must have arrived on the day of your writing; and but for the late departure of the mail much sooner. As correspondence with this place by mail is generally tedious, it is probable that my letter has not yet miscarried. If it arrives, you will find that I am willing, with the help of God, to meet you on fair and practicable terms, in any city in America, and I may add, in England, Scotland, or Ireland. But your terms I decline for the present, because they are unfair and inconsistent. The only condition annexed to your public invitation, was that you should-have an equal vote in determining the time and place. After I had accepted your challenge, as you expressly called it, you add in your letter to me, as another condition, that you must have the last speech: although the fact of Mr. Walker's giving the challenge was the reason which you gave for your having the last speech at Mount Pleasant. You appear to think, with the lawyers, that the last speech is a matter of some importance, and that it must be gained, if possible, whether you give or receive a challenge, and whether you assume the affirmative or the negative of the proposition in dispute.

You do not object to the discussion of the questions which I sent to you, and therefore suggest the propriety of having the meeting notified to the public forthwith. Yet your letter is so constructed, that you would consider this publication a virtual agreement on my part to discuss an equal number of questions written by yourself, which I have never seen, and to which I might have very serious objections after seeing them. My desire is, that with the grace of Christ in my heart, my lips shall be consecrated to the defence of truth and righteousness. He who disputes from ambition or ostentation, may promise you a debate at random: but shew me the questions first, as I have shewn you mine, and I hope that God will direct me to a suitable answer.
If you cannot agree to discuss my questions without obtrusive conditions, and if, after examining your questions, I should not approve of them, the proposal of my letter was, that we should discuss “the subject and the made of baptism” without any question; or that we should meet upon the proposition contained in your challenge, to the discussion of which you have dared the Pedohaptist world. As you gave the challenge, and as you take the affirmative of your own proposition, both your rules give to me the closing speech. This, however, my letter does not ask, but requests that both parties may have liberty to speak until they are satisfied.

As Dr. Keith, by showing your correspondence with him to the citizens, has made it public, it is not improper for me to observe that it was premature in you to tell him that your proposals could not be manfully or justly rejected by me. I am informed that in his answer, he has represented me as a forward enemy of the Baptists, and as disposed to retreat from this controversy. No person acquainted with the state of things here would expect him to give me a favourable character. I am constitutionally timid, but I hope that through grace I am not malicious. This same grace has also strengthened my heart against the fear of man, so that although I have not the talents and preparation to be desired in such a controversy, I am willing to trust in the Lord, and encounter even the hero of Mount Pleasant. At least the question, who has acted manfully and generously? and who wishes to retreat? will one day be submitted to the judgment of the United States.

W. L. MACCALLA.
Augusta, Kentucky.

Mr. CAMPBELL,—Your letter of June 16th ult. has just been received. It speaks of the time and place, the topics, regulation, and notification of the dispute in prospect. You appear willing to see me at Augusta, if I will comply with all the conditions of your letter. As this compliance is declined, the place of meeting is a point still to be determined. If you should yet consent to encounter me here, the meeting of our presbytery and synod in which our congregation has business imperiously demanding my attention, will make it desirable that we should appoint a time a week sooner or several weeks later than October 1st.

The adjusting of the points of difference, in the form of disputable propositions, however difficult, is deemed important by us both. After having intimated to you my objections to the form contained in your challenge, I proposed a number of questions which bring into view all the matter of the question contained in your challenge, with these advantages, that its complication is removed by method, and it is presented in such a manner as to bring the parties to a fair and direct issue. You do not seem necessarily to doubt that these ends have been attained. Yet as a condition of your agreeing to discuss these questions, which you have seen and examined, you require that I should agree on my part, to discuss as many others which I have never seen nor examined; although you have had the same opportunity of conveying them to me, that I had of sending mine to you. “He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.” To promise a contest on a subject not yet known, is a sort of theological Quixotism, worthy only of the dark ages. If you have been told that I love controversy for its own sake, you have been misinformed. T would not waste my breath, nor poison my heart, nor disgrace religion by vain jangling. With the help of God, I am willing to defend the truth as held up to view in the proposition referred to, or in any other equitable form, or if you prefer it, with no form at all. I am willing to meet you with no other words before us than “The subject and mode of baptism.”

Although you have made no particular objection to my questions, I have several to the one which you propose in your epistle, viz. “Is infant affusion, or is infant baptism, a divine institution?” I have the same objections to the proposition discussed by you and Mr. Walker, that infant baptism or affusion is a divine institution. 1st. These propositions confound the subject and the mode, which are distinct things, and which may be so exhibited in fewer words as in the end of the last paragraph. 2nd. These propositions encourage a popular misconception, which has been too much insisted upon by our adversaries; that is, that we hold infant baptism to the exclusion of believer's baptism; than which nothing is more incorrect. We maintain, as strenuously as our opposers, the administration of baptism to believers; but we differ from them in this proposition, that faith in the subject is an essential qualification for baptism; or, which is the same thing, we are willing to prove that baptism should be administered to infants as well as to their believing parents. 3rd. These propositions confine us within narrower bounds with regard to the mode, than we in good conscience occupy. We do not advocate affusion exclusively; and if you leave this word out of the propositions, they are confined to the subject, and say nothing of the mode. We admit of washing and sprinkling as well as pouring, and we even acknowledge the lawfulness of dipping; but we deny that submersion it essential to Christian baptism, and you affirm that it is. Since then this proposition will bring us directly and fairly to an issue, why should you make a condition of an interview that we should assume ground worse than that which we in truth occupy:

With respect to your 9th article I would observe, that the people will always let us know when they have heard enough, but the parties should he permitted to judge when they have said enough. In your 5th article you claim the closing address. This you would probably have without any stipulation, for in practice I am not tenacious, but I see no reason for acknowledging your superior right. In the conference at Mount Pleasant you say, that as Mr. Walker gave the challenge, it became his duty to open the debate.” You of course had the privilege of closing. The above is your own declaration; and the only reason which you give for making it Mr. Walker's duty to open the debate, is, that he gave the challenge. Now the case is altered, and your view of duty seems to alter with it. According to the principle and the practice stated in your book, as Mr. Campbell has given the challenge, it becomes his duty to open the debate, and mine to close; but, according to the demand of your letter, you must close whether you give or receive a challenge. Since this is a new practice, your letter gives a new reason for it, that is, that it is the right of the negative to close. But where did you learn this rule? I am as ignorant of its origin as of its correctness. This rule or its opposite would, in doctrinal disputes, be arbitrary in its application. The same doctrinal opinion may be exhibited equally well to opposite forms of expression; and whether the proposition be affirmative or negative, the same proof would be required on both sides. Of this you will see an example in my two letters. In civil courts, and in the courts of our church, there is a rule on this subject, but it relates to matters of fact in judicial cases, and not to doctrinal questions. This practice is, however, the very opposite of that which your letter approves, for it gives to the affirmative the right of opening and closing. I wish not to take advantage of this. My desire is, that each party may be heard fairly and fully, and until he is satisfied, and if we have not sense enough to quit when we are done, the people will, to our mortification, give their opinion by leaving us.

The inequality of your terms, you now see, is the only impediment to our meeting. This, it is hoped, you will relinquish, not only for justice' sake, but because it is in direct opposition to your challenge. You there say, “I have to add, that I must have an equal vote in determining the time and place. This is the only restriction I attach to the challenge I now publish.” There is nothing here of your closing the debate or enjoying any other privilege above your antagonist. If, however, you cannot comply with these fair terms, I have only one other plan to propose. It is this: We will agree to discuss the very proposition which you have offered in your challenge. As this is one in which you take the affirmative, and as both your rules, however contradictory and unauthorized, will give me the closing address, though unsought, nothing more remains now to be settled but the time and place, which are the only subjects on which you claim a vote. If you should visit this place, I would endeavor to make all other engagements suit your convenience. If you should prefer some other place where I could procure books, or to which I could with cheapness and convenience convey my own, such as Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Steubenville, Washington in Pennsylvania, or Washington city, Baltimore or Philadelphia, New Haven, or Boston. I should like for the time to be shortly before or after the general assembly, which convenes in Philadelphia on the third Thursday in May, and sits about two or three weeks. When the preliminaries are adjusted, all possible publicity may be given to the appointment according to your request. If it be your choice, you can send a notice to the papers in Philadelphia and elsewhere, that, “on the third Monday of May, Mr. Alexander Campbell, of the regular Baptist church, and Mr. W. L. Maccalla, of the Presbyterian church, will (Deo volente) discuss the following proposition, viz.
Infant sprinkling it a human tradition, and injurious to the well being of society, religious and political. For the discussion of this proposition, the former of these gentlemen gave a general challenge to Pedobaptist ministers.”

As you have offered a system of rules for the debate, it may not be wrong for me to do the same. It need have no effect upon the question where we shall meet. They are not made conditions. Words in brackets are considered as so many blanks.

1. The proposition for discussion shall be the following, viz. [“Infant sprinkling is a human tradition, and injurious to the well being of society, religious and political.”]

2. Each speaker shall be entitled to an alternate address of thirty minutes and no longer, unless the other party waive his right.

3. The books brought forward shall be equally accessible to both parties.

4. The established rules of decorum must be observed.

5. The discussion shall be moderated by three men; each of the parties choosing one, and these two a third, which last shall belong to no religious society. These are to keep order, and not to decide the question.

6. The debate shall be opened by and shall (God willing,) commence on the [18th instant,] at the meeting-house, at [9 o’clock, A. M.] and continue, if necessary, until [2 o’clock, P. M.] And it shall, if necessary, be continued during the same hours, and at the same place, and under the same super-intendance [unless altered by mutual agreement,) from day to day, until both parties are satisfied.

Buffaloe Printing Office.

Mr. MacCalla,

Sir,—Your letter of the 2nd, but post-marked the 8th, came to hand yesterday. It seems to import that the terms of conference may not be so easily adjusted as your first epistle portended. You object to my not forwarding the questions promised. My sole reason was, that my letter was sufficiently crowded without them. Besides, I supposed that a person proposing to discuss a subject of so great importance, and of so common occurrence, as that proposed by yourself, could be at no loss to answer any question connected therewith. If I had proposed to send you twenty-one questions on any other subject than that proposed by yourself, or if I had proposed to give you no information of them until the day of debate, your objection would have been relevant and cogent j but as the circumstances are, it appears irrelevant and futile. I should never have proposed to discuss a subject, on which twenty-one questions could be proposed, that after two month's deliberation, I would fear to encounter. So little attention to your twenty-one questions has been paid by myself, that were I now asked what they are, I could not, from recollection.
mention the half of them. On reading them once or twice, I saw the drift of them, and apprehended the turn of reflection that dictated them. With a very little reflection, I found myself able to answer each of them with a yea or a nay, with, perhaps, a little explanation in, one or two instances.

Though, you say, I have made no particular objection to your questions, you have several to the one which I proposed. Now, sir, were I to be so captious, or so precise in objecting, as you seem to be, we should not settle the preliminaries in a year. The fact is, I had many objections to your questions, as being inconsequential, confused, far-fetched, and inapplicable to the faith or practice of Christians, as respects Christian baptism. Yet, knowing the peculiar delicacy of the feelings, and the keen sensibility of the conscience of Pedobaptist teachers in general, on such topics as those contained in your queries, I made no objection to any of them, lest it should retard our meeting; but thought it best to stipulate for the privilege of proposing an equal number.

You have favoured me with three objections to my one question. It was well I did not propose twenty-one. The cogency of your three objections I confess myself too dull to apprehend. One thing appears pretty plain, that you conceive the question —" Is infant affusion, or baptism, a divine institution," obliges you, as you express it, “to assume worse ground than that which in truth you occupy.” This would indeed be unreasonable, to make your ground of defence “morse” than it really is. But while you allow believer’s baptism to be a divine institution, and while you practise infant affusion, you maintain that to be a divine institution also. Why then object to defend the precise thing which you practise? And to say that you do not always practise it, is nothing to the merits of the question; for, inasmuch as you sometimes practise it as a divine institution, it behooves you for one such occasion to be able to prove it to be a divine institution. And if the whole proposition cannot be proved; viz. that infant affusion is a divine institution, to cut it into pieces, to divide into words, syllables, vowels, or consonants, and prove it in piece-meal, will, every logician knows, avail nothing.

With regard to who shall open, and who close the debate, I had thought that my statement of the attendant circumstances of my giving the challenge alluded to, would have prevented such reasons as you assign for differing from me on that item. My stating that it behooved Mr. Walker to open the debate from the circumstance of his having given the challenge, was true, as far as it went; but it was also true, that his having the affirmative side of the question, was that which rendered his commencement essentially necessary. In this controversy, Baptists have nothing to prove as respects their practice, Pedobaptists agree with them, that a disciple immersed on a profession of the Christian faith, has received Christian baptism. Our practice then is correct, in this respect; Pedobaptists themselves being judges. They, indeed, blame us for omitting to baptize infants, but not for what we really do, consequently it is they who have to prove their practice, and it is our duty to show that their arguments are inconclusive. In every controversy, then, with Pedobaptists, upon this topic, they affirm and we deny, they commenced and we respond. But you profess to be ignorant of the origin of this rule of practice. I say that it originates in the fitness of things, and is supported by long prescription. For precedent and for proof I refer to the era of the reformation. In the famous disputes at Leipsic, between Eckius Luther and Carolostadius, June 27th, 1519. Eckius gave the challenge, took the affirmative, and opened the debate with Carolostadius. On the 4th of July, 1519, Eckius maintains the pope's supreme authority, Luther denies it, Eckius opens the debate and Luther closes. The same took place at Baden, May, 1526, between Oecolampadius with Eckius. In the dispute between Luther and Oecolampadius concerning the “real pretence,” Luther affirms, and Oecolampadius denies, Luther commences and Oecolampadius responds. See many other instances from page 102 to 200, Du Pin's Ecclesiastical History, Vol. 3.

In the last place on this head, you allege that the possibility of converting an affirmative proposition into a negative, renders such a rule of procedure of very doubtful application. I admit that the negative proposition, infant affusion is not a divine ordinance, may be converted into an affirmative, thus: infant affusion is a human tradition; yet the nature of things will not change with the words we may choose to represent them. Still the grand predicate divine institution is denied of the subject, infant baptism, and the grand truth in pursuit of which the investigation proceeds is denied of the subject of the proposition; which, according to my views, will force the proposition into the form of a direct negative in the discussion.

I contend for this rule of procedure, then, on the ground of the fitness of things, and on the ground of long prescription in theological discussions.

I am willing to change the time proposed for holding the said discussion from the 1st of October, to Wednesday the 15th of October. Later than that period T cannot think it would be expedient to defer our interview, as the weather will then be precarious and the days short. Owing to the meeting of our association, which I am under the necessity of attending, I could not with any degree of propriety promise to attend sooner than the first of October. And as you were so kind in mentioning New Haven, Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, I think, for the sake of exhibiting to better advantage your very accommodating disposition, you should have mentioned London, Dublin, or Ghent, as water convenience and plenty of books equally recommend those places. I will however be still more accommodating than you, for I will go to your own village as aforesaid.

I will now propose you twenty-one questions, and thus prevent all further demur on this ground.

1. What is the doctrinal import of Christian baptism?
2. Are infants members of the Christian church?
3. Are infants members of the Christian church by natural birth or baptism?
4. Is the Abrahamic church a branch of the Noabic church? or, in other words, were the patriarchs before Moses, and the Jews after Moses, one and the same church in different dispensations?

5. Was the sacrificial rite before Moses, and circumcision after Moses, one and the same teal in substance, though in different forms?

6. Was the church at Jerusalem, at Rome, at Corinth, at Samaria, or the first gentile church at Caesarea, a Baptist or a Pedobaptist church?

7. What benefit does an infant receive from baptism?

8. Does baptism represent, seal, and apply any thing to an infant?

9. Does baptism become an effectual means of salvation to an infant?

10. Is not the present enjoyment of all the benefits and blessings of the New Testament confined to believers?

11. Have not parents a right to baptize their own children?

12. Ought not all the household of a believer, his slaves, and their children to be baptized on his profession of the faith?

13. Ought not infants to be baptized the eighth day?

14. Ought infant females to be baptized contrary to the law of circumcision?

15. Ought not baptized infants to be admitted to the Lord's table?

16. Are infants under any vow or obligation from baptism?

17. Were infants members of the patriarchal church?

18. Can there be a baptism suited to infants without faith, and a baptism suited to believers, and yet be but one baptism?

19. What is the action of baptism?

20. Did the apostles either rantize or baptize infants?

21. Is there a command in all the Bible to rantize or baptize infants?

These questions I arrange on the principle of correspondences, to be a per contra to those you have proposed, as far as the answers apprehended would come into contact. But, sir, neither your twenty-one questions nor mine are the best course to come to a fair and clear issue. They afford us themes of copious verbosity, and would no doubt in the end afford to all intelligent and impartial hearers sufficient data to judge on what side truth lay. But it is like walking nine miles to come at a point which is accessible in one, and that merely for the sake of shewing our dexterity in walking. Did I from my soul desire to investigate the subject for my own good, and to exhibit it for the good of others; or did I cordially wish to help a fellow disciple out of the mire, or be helped myself, I would calmly, in the fear of God, with humility of mind and pure benevolence for yourself and all others who may be present on the occasion, and with all openness to conviction, propose only four points for discussion. One of these I conceive of great consequence, not only as respects baptists, but as respects the whole exhibition of the Christian religion.

1. Were the Jews in their corporate state, whether called national or ecclesiastical, an association, the same as the Christian church?
This topic I would propose as a mere introduction to the subject primarily in view—then,

2. What is the doctrinal import of baptism?
3. Who is the proper subject?
4. What is the action?

As these questions equally comprehend the substance of your twenty-one and mine, I feel perfectly satisfied, if you are agreed, to investigate these in the fullest manner, by every possible means of illustration, and to confine our whole conference to them. As I have dwelt chiefly on that article of arrangement which you seem to make of the greatest importance, I have no room to say any thing of the other eight items. They still appear to me preferable to any alterations you have proposed. But in case of your refusing to accede to these rules of procedure, I have to propose that the three persons who shall sit as moderators, shall meet the day preceding our conference, and that they shall, after having heard read in their hearing our whole correspondence, decide, both what questions shall be discussed, and in what manner. I will pledge myself to comply with their decisions. This I think ought to be satisfactory, if the rules adopted by the committee, preceding the debate at Mount Pleasant, will not please you. I have only to request that this epistle be answered as promptly as I have answered your's, and that you would excuse this hasty scrawl. I was interrupted twenty times since I sat down to write it.

Very respectfully your's, &c.

A. CAMPBELL.

Augusta, Kentucky.

Mr. CAMPBELL,—In the progress of our correspondence, it is a pleasure to me to remember that this controversy is not of my own seeking. Mine is a defensive attitude. Your challenge was bold, public, and general: neither did it exhibit on its face the least design to take advantage of any stripling who might, in the faith of Israel's God, step out to meet you. You did not enumerate rules of debate; you did not prescribe weapons to your antagonist; you did not lay down what he was, and what he was not to defend; you did not require the last blow as a sine qua non to an encounter; but you simply stated what you would undertake to prove, and left your opponent to choose his own position, to which he certainly has a right. You expressly renounced all other restrictions to your challenge, except the right of an equal vote as to the time and place of meeting. Two years after the publication of the debate you reiterate your defiance, without adding any farther conditions. In the first page of your strictures on father Ralston's review, after complaining that Mr. Walker's friends under-rated his talents, you add, who on his side of the question, since or before that debate, has done better? or who can do better? Is there no man in all the hosts of Pedobaptists of greater capacity and industry than Mr. Walker? If there be, let the cause be maintained, and let not Mr. Walker bear all the blame, as if the whole cause rested on him.” While thus bravely exulting over our armies, who, (as you imagined,) were panic struck at your superior prowess; why did you not inform us, that besides all equal vote in the time and place, you must choose the position and weapons of your opponent, and that in addition to this, you must have the last fire? Why did you not tell us that you must have exclusive privileges, and not only choose your own theses, but you must also indite the identical words which we are to defend, although, in our conception, they may countenance errors which our souls abhor? “With an invitation thus restricted, I have never complied, for such a one was never given; but remember, sir, that the challenge actually published by yourself has been accepted, with its accompanying condition.

Although I cannot admit the right of an antagonist to direct what I shall defend, yet when he gives a reason for preferring one proposition to another, I am willing to listen. Some of your reasons are as follow: Why then object to defend the precise thing which you practise?—And if the whole proposition cannot be proved, viz. that infant a fusion if a divine institution: to cut it into pieces, and to divide it into words, syllables, vowels, or consonants, and prove it in piece-meal, will, every logician knows, avail nothing.” To your question I answer, that I am willing to defend the precise thing which I practise. I practise the baptism of believers and their seed; whereas I am sorry to observe that you with the world think that these two stand in opposition to each other. I practise aspersion, though I equally approve of ablution and affusion; yet I am not willing to defend the latter to the exclusion of the former, nor even in oppugnation of immersion. In your remark concerning the cutting of a proposition into pieces, I scarcely know whether to consider you in earnest. It is hardly possible that I can have the honour of giving you the first information that some questions may be divided, and that this is practised by all eminent, deliberative bodies, whether ecclesiastical or political. Do you think it derogatory to the logical, or grammatical, or rhetorical character of the senate of the United States, that their ninth rule says, “If the question in debate contain several points, any member may have the same divided?” You will agree, it is to be hoped, that the subject and the mode of baptism are distinct points, and that the question may be so divided, without waking each word, syllable, and letter, a distinct subject of discussion.

Much of your letter is spent to establish your claims to the grand desideratum, the last speech. The fitness of things and long prescription are the pillars upon which the fabric rests. These, you say, give to the negative the right of closing. The negative, therefore, you are determined to have. Recollecting, however, that you have to take the affirmative of the proposition contained in your challenge, you bring the fitness of things, or (as you there call it,) the nature of things, to a -bearing upon the affirmative proposition, “Infant affusion is a human tradition;” and you shew, or think you shew, that it “will force the proposition into the form of a direct negative in the discussion.” If you can force one affirmative into a negative in order to secure the closing speech, it seems to me that very little more force would prove that I ought not to speak at all. This additional force is probably the very thing which caused bishop Cunning, of England, a hundred and fifty years ago, to deny those whom he had challenged the liberty of replying.

In establishing a right upon the ground of prescription, you are aware that the custom must be made to appear. For this purpose you refer me to certain nameless occurrences in Du Pin's Ecclesiastical History, Vol. iii. p. 162—200. Will you be so kind as to send me so particular a reference that the place may be found in the London edition of 1698, as that contains nothing of the sort, in the pages marked, and the index refers to no conferences except those of Carthage and Jerusalem, p. 220,321? The latter, A. D. 415, has nothing to the purpose. Neither has the former, which occurred four years sooner, except that the long disputes of the Donatists about the qualities of opposers and defenders, may appear to authorize the pertinacity of some with regard to the privileges confessed by affirmatives and negatives. At last Augustine obliged them to come to the main question, which was, “Where was the catholic church?” The Donatists opened, and Augustine closed. Nothing can be gathered from such facts, unless the fitness of things can extract a favourable conclusion.

If we had Seekendorf's History of Lutheranism, and Loscheim's Acts and Documents of the Reformation, referred to in Maclaine's Mosheim, (4. 44. Chariest edit. 1811.) we might possibly obtain some satisfaction on the other cases referred to. Du Pin is the only author whom you quote, and in the very short abstract which he gives, in half a page, of the dispute between Eckius and Carolostadius, which occupied a week, there is no account of the number or order of their speeches. He does not expressly tell us who closed, or for what reason. The debate which immediately followed between Eckius and Luther, was professedly on twenty-six propositions, half of them produced by each of the disputants, not dictated by one to the other. This debate is divided by Du Pin into a number of conferences. Several of the first were occupied in discussing the supremacy of the pope, the subject to which your letter refers. You say that Eckius, having the affirmative, opened the debate. Du Pin intimates that Eckius closed the first conference, and does not give the least hint who it was that closed the whole dispute on the topic. On the subject of indulgences, Eckius took the affirmative as before, and if Du Pin's abstract give any information on this point, Eckius both opened and closed. Although he was so remarkable for voice and gesture, for information and readiness of utterance, he was exceedingly fond of this same privilege of opening and closing. Like Charles I. in his paper controversy with the noble Henderson, he appeared to think this a privilege due to his dignity. He obtained it in a conference with Melancthon at Ratisbon, as we are informed in a letter from Strasburg by Calvin to Farel. And if, according to Luther, as quoted by Seekendorf, and from him by Milner, (4-346.), Eckius took another more ungenerous advantage of Carolostadius in the conference above mentioned, I have no doubt that he both opened and closed the contest; although Du Pin, a popish writer, has mentioned neither of these advantages. This author gives no information about the closing speech at Baden, although you say that Eckius opened, Oecolampadius closed. The same may be said of the conference at Rome, which occurred December 17th, 1537. At Marpurgh, (if that be the other instance to which you refer,) Luther produced five articles of exception against the doctrine of the Zwinglians, of whom Oecolampadius was one. Du Phi does not positively say who opened and closed, but from his narrative I should draw a conclusion the very opposite of yours. It is a wonder that you did not add to this case a similar one which occurred at Lambeth in England, about the year 1584. It was a kind of conference between the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Winchester on the one part, and Dr. Spark and Mr. Travers on the other. The latter gentlemen produced articles of exceptions against the church of England. The second of these was on baptism. They objected to private and lay baptism,—to their view of its absolute necessity and infallible efficacy,—to certain superstitious interrogatories, and the use of the cross, (Toulmin’s Neal, 1. 422.) Although I see no evidence of any privilege given to the negative, I have no doubt that much might be obtained by that perspicacity which has discovered such wonders in the foregoing instances.

If I am not as ignorant of arithmetic as you think me to be of logic, the questions contained in your letters and the Appendix to your debate, amount to one hundred and thirty-five. I am willing that you shall appear on the scene of conflict with all these, and I am willing to meet you with the two following or similar propositions:

1st. Faith is not essential to baptism.
2nd. Submersion is not essential to baptism.

You will then have room to display your wit on the number and character of my questions, and I should have an opportunity of giving my opinion of your one hundred and thirty-five questions. Remember, however, my former proposals to meet you on the bare subject and mode,

and my agreement to meet you on the proposition contained in your challenge, and the condition therein expressed.

W. L. MACCALLA.

Buffaloe Creek.

Mr. MACCALLA,

sir,—Yours was received last night. It differs very much both in spirit and style from your first. In your first you objected to meeting me on the bare ground of my challenge; saying, that I should not understand you as professing a willingness to confer with me on the truth or falsehood of the statement in my proclamation; “That infant sprinkling is a human tradition, and injurious to the well being of society, religious and political.” You there proposed twenty-one questions. In your next you complained of the one question I proposed, and because I had not sent you the twenty-one questions I then promised to send. In my next, I sent you twenty-one questions, and also proposed reducing the topics to four questions. In your last you profess a willingness to be off both from your own twenty one questions and mine; and agree to meet me on the bare words of my challenge, or on two propositions, both negatives, and thus to force me to give you the last speech. In my first, I proposed rules of conference similar to those framed at Mount Pleasant, to expedite our interview, and regulate our discussion. To those you object to as inequitable. I proposed in my last, that if the rules I had proposed, should not meet your approbation, as yours had not met with mine, the three moderators should decide, both the questions to be discussed, and the manner of discussing them, and pledge myself to abide by their decision. Of this you take no notice; but very gravely and generously proceed to accuse me with departing from my challenge; as offering you new conditions; and appending a sine gun non to them. This, I was about to say, is worse than the quibbling of school boys. You should anticipate that there is a probability of our correspondence meeting the public eye; and that whatever your design may be in throwing obstacles in the way, it will, perhaps, appear as if you wished to be off from the conference for ever. It certainly strikes me so. Otherwise, why, in the name of common sense, would you object to me, as proposing terms of conference, as a sine qua non, when I proposed to refer the whole matter to men, and to submit to their rules? If this is inequitable, all arbitrations and references are inequitable. If this is inequitable, and my rules are inequitable, then it follows that your rules are equitable, or that they must be so considered; at least, they are such as please you better than those you would expect from a committee. Moreover, while you talk so much of my proposing questions and theses for you, you should remember that you began by proposing questions for me; for had you at first proposed to meet me on the ground of my challenge, and the subject matter of it, I should never have proposed any questions at all. You have, or appear to have, the rare talent of committing faults, and of charging them on another. You project a course, and when I follow you, you gravely censure me as departing from my printed challenge; and as leading you off to worse ground than you occupy. As to the latter, instead of leading tiff, my proposal was to lead you 'on publicly to assume, and, if possible, to defend the precise ground you occupy in contradiction to Anti-pedobaptists; that is, that infant rantism, or superfusion, is a divine ordinance; for surely, there is no dispute between us and you about believer's baptism. This, I grant you, includes both the subject and the very action itself, which the law of Christ specifies and ordains. This, therefore, being the very point at issue between us, I suggested to you the propriety of assuming it as such, and, if possible, of proving it to be a divine ordinance; which it certainly behooves you to do, so long as you continue to practise it in the divine name. But perhaps your objection against assuming this ground, in the first instance (for to this we must come at length, as the alone question at issue) is, that it would lead you to take the affirmative; for it seems you are quite averse to this, and are determined, if possible, to be on the negative; as I think you must be convinced that it behooves the affirmative to open the discussion. As to what you say concerning my references to Du Pin, being at present from home on a journey, I have not that book at hand; but if you are willing to rest the matter upon my proving from that writer, and others, that the affirmative has usually opened every discussion where theses were so limited,
I will engage to do it, or concede to you the closing speech. But why you should hare dwelt go much on this topic, as a sine qua non, when I consented to be governed by the rules of the moderators, without even so much as noticing this important concession, this just and reasonable alternative, quite astonishes me; it seems to argue something very forbidding in a religious antagonist. When you will not agree to have the matter referred, it is evident you look for an advantage. If I must give you an advantage I will do it gratuitously; not under the semblance of a right. I will, then, to obviate all difficulties on my side, if possible, propose to meet you at Augusta, or rather at Mays Lick, on Wednesday, the 15th day of October next, the day before or the day after, as may best suit your convenieney, at eleven o'clock, A. M.; and that you shall have the privilege of both opening and closing the discussion, and of speaking twice for my once, that the words of my challenge shall be the subject of discussion, and that the moderators shall act as aforesaid. I will either meet you there, or I will agree that the moderators, on the day before our meeting, after having heard all our correspondence, make the rules by which we shall proceed. If I must give advantage, I will do it all at once, and manifestly. Talk no more then, if you please, about sine qua non. I will meet you as aforesaid, if the Lord will, either on your twenty-one questions and mine; or on the words of my challenge; or on the four questions proposed in my last; or on the decision of the three moderators that shall be chosen. I have mentioned Mays Lick, as by letters sent me from Kentucky, I understand it to be a much better place than Augusta for accommodating the country in general, and that many more could attend. I request you, if determined to meet me, to inform Dr. Keith, on receipt of this, and to let him know to which of the proposed terms you choose to accede; and also to have our intended meeting made as public as possible. You will also please to write me immediately on the receipt of this. Please also to recollect, that the challenge which elicited mine, came forth from your armies; and talk no more of the stripling David; nor of the Philistine Goliath, How good soever the analogy may be between you and the tender stripling; for our part we disclaim comparison with the mighty Philistine.

P. S. I wrote this hastily, while stopping for dinner on a journey. You will therefore please excuse inaccuracies of style, and want of method. Your's respectfully,

A. CAMPBELL.

Augusta.

Mr. CAMPBELL,—If, as yon intimate, I am afraid to meet you, it should be matter of regret, when we consider the goodness of my cause, the power of Christ, and the experience which I have had of his faithfulness and condescending goodness. Yon are mistaken, however, in one statement which may encourage you in this belief. It is that I try to force you to give me the last speech. If this were true, it might be an evidence of fear, or something worse. Your assertion of the fact is as improper as your manner of giving me an unsought privilege is impolite.

Although to be afraid of so formidable an antagonist would be, in some measure, excusable, I am not willing to lie under your charge of unrighteous behaviour for omitting to notice your proposal for a theological arbitration. In your letter of July 21st, you propose that the moderators,” after having heard read in their hearing, our whole correspondence, decide both what questions shall be discussed, and in what manner. I will pledge myself to comply with their decisions.” This I omitted for the want of room, because you had already my opinion twice on such measures, and because I did not wish to expose every inadvertency of which you might be guilty. If I were, in haste, to offer such a proposal, I would thank my correspondent for passing it in silence. In my letter of July 2nd, I expressed an opinion that such a proceeding was nothing better than theological Quixotism. In a letter of July 21st, I considered that to promise a debate at random arose from ambition or ostentation. When you, in your pledge copied above, commit the very fault here reproved, did decorum require that I should repeat my condemnation? or was it necessary for me to insinuate that you chose ground, which you knew had been abandoned, for the purpose of giving to your candour and bravery a more illustrious and uninterrupted display?

Concerning this proposal you say, “If this is inequitable, then all arbitrations and references are inequitable;” and you insinuate that a refusal on my part is an indirect impeachment of the ability or integrity of a committee. The third rule proposed in your letter of June 16th, and in the system adopted at Mount Pleasant, is, “that these moderators shall merely keep order, and not pronounce judgment on the merits of the debate.” Did you, by this rule, mean any insinuation of ignorance or corruption? Did you, by this proposal, mean to make war upon all arbitrations and references, which are intended to decide upon the merits of causes? It is well for schoolboys to receive subjects for composition and declamation. It is well for students of theology to receive subjects for trial exercises. In both these cases, however, as well as in arbitrations and references, the merits are decided by the committee. This, which is really the most innocent part of the business, and which has been the practice of the literary and theological world, time immemorial, does not please you; but you are delighted with the thought of returning to a state of minority, of engaging in a sort of polemical fencing, on a subject arbitrarily dictated by others, and concerning the tendency of which to good or evil we are utterly ignorant. If the long parliament of England which you hold in such contempt, had been men of your liberal conscience, they would have given Archbishop Laud less trouble about the et cetera oath. But they complain, “We are here to swear to we know not what, to something that is not expressed; by which means we are left to the arbitrary interpretation of the judge.” You and men of the same spirit often accuse us of a selfish adherence to the Assembly of divines convened by this parliament. This correspondence should cause you to inquire again who is it that is most disposed to servile compliances. Is it the man who cautiously and prayerfully examines and compares the Westminster articles, and then adopts them because he finds that form of sound words consistent with the word of God? Is it he who, in sacred things, is unwilling to make a leap in the dark? or is it that man who pompously pledges himself to abide by the future decision of an unknown and mixt committee? and who takes frequent occasions of ridiculing the tender consciences of those who would rather know a matter before they answer it.

This alternative of your proposals is of course rejected. I must treat your four questions in the same way. On the three last of them we can come to no immediate issue. Lest a silent concealment of my disgust should again incur your resentment, I must tell you that the first of these four, and some others from the same quarter, are only calculated to darken counsel by words without knowledge.

To excuse yourself for so long persisting upon the right of prescribing what I should defend, you say that I first dictated twenty-one questions to you. I can find no excuse for this statement, except that you were on a journey when you made it, and had not my first letter with you. You will there find that they were “respectfully submitted for your consideration, and (if you please) for your adoption or rejection, amendment or selection, enlargement or diminution.” Did I then, or have I ever since, made your adoption of them a condition of our meeting? So far was I from acting the part of a dictator, that you have more than once commended the spirit of that letter. So far from insisting upon their adoption after they were trammeled by your obscure and ambiguous questions, I have incurred the censure of inconsistency by abandoning them without a struggle. This I did in silence, not, as Dr. Keith has said, because I was afraid to meet you, but because I was afraid to tell you my opinion of your questions, lest it should prevent a meeting, by raising too high that magisterial indignation which has been manifested in several of your letters, and which, from a long habit of domineering without control, has become quite ungovernable. This same motive induced me entirely to suppress the first letter which was penned for your address, because, on reading it to my friend, Major Morris, he gave it as his opinion, that, by irritating your feelings with sever animadversions upon your book, it would prove an obstruction to our meeting. To the same cause you may ascribe my silence hitherto concerning your character, although mine occupied the introduction to your first letter. Whatever may have moved you to magnify my reputation and standing, I am sorry that I cannot praise your orthodoxy or piety. The numerous, respectable, and almost uniform reports against you in these respects, are corroborated by your various writings. It is said that you are polluted with the theology of your favourite author, the disciple of Dr. Priestly, whose Socinian and infidel pravity has been so completely exposed by his Baptist countryman, the excellent Andrew Fuller. If this be a mistake, you will rejoice to correct it: and be assured that such a favour will give me no less pleasure than yourself. Until this is done, no devoted minister of the DIVINE SAVIOUR can desire any other intercourse with you than as an adversary.
Your declaration that I am convinced that the affirmative should open, (and of course the negative close,) notwithstanding my assurances to the contrary, is a much more modest insinuation than you are accustomed to making. In this respect it resembles a very delicate remark in your first address at Mount Pleasant. It is in the following words: “I cannot persuade myself to believe that they who affirm that baptism came in the room of circumcision, really think so.” A real Christian who could utter such things, not from hasty passion, or settled malignity, but from sincere conviction, could hardly wish to see me, except as an antagonist. In this capacity I am inclined to meet you; not from any favourable opinion of your piety or sincerity, but because you are allowed (and I suppose justly) to be the greatest champion of anabaptism in America; because you have charged the Pedobaptist world with administering a factitious and pernicious ordinance; because you have publicly challenged them to stand on their defence; because you have publicly gloried in their silence, as arising from guilt, timidity, or incompetency; and because your partizans have bantered me, and thug given a particular direction to your general invitation.

To this invitation I at first objected, because, although it brings us to a speedy issue, yet it confounds things quite distinct, and it is clothed in unbecoming language. True, its exceptionable phrase, infant sprinkling, is not so low and profane an expression as David Jones’ watery hocus pocus, yet it is intended as a sneer, and of course will never, by the lovers of piety and courtesy, be made a member of a question in debate. This proposition, however, with all its confusion of points and vulgarity of expression, is still preferable to any other alternative which you have offered. My former repeated acceptance of it is now confirmed. As you were mistaken about the superior eligibility of May’s Lick, I was reluctant to comply with your wish. Your friends and correspondents, Dr. Keith and Major Davis undertook the responsibility of requesting on your behalf that Washington might be the place of meeting. As this was to your advantage I consented. A copy of our joint publication is enclosed.

W. L. MACCALLA.

Mr. MACCALLA,

SIR,—Your long-looked-for favour came to hand last night. It assures me that you are now disposed to meet me at Washington, on the proposition printed in my general invitation. But under what regulations I know not; as you have declined referring the matter to the three moderators, and have said nothing in your last on what rules or order should be observed. It appears your conscience if too tender to allow the moderators such a liberty, as to say how the debate should be conducted, and which of all the topics and questions proposed should be discussed. It appears also that you omitted to notice this proposal in a former letter for want of room; yet there is more than one third of a page of your letter blank; so that you must have had more to say about it in your former letter, than in your last; for you do not write so much on it in your last, as might have been written.
on the blank in your preceding epistle, and you might as well have tried to arouse my feelings then, as now. It moreover appears, that your conscience was not so tender, on the subject of my character for “orthodoxy and piety,” as to prevent you from insinuating, nay, from declaring, that Dr. Priestly’s disciple was my favourite author, contrary to all evidence or fact from any thing in any writings, or from any “respectable” source. You shall, perhaps, soon know that I have no favourite authors in religion except one, and that man who says I am a first or second-hand disciple of Priestly or of any Socinian author, is a man of no piety nor respectability of character: nor is there a man living who can say, or dare say in my presence, that I ever expressed a sentiment derogatory to the Lord Jesus as a divine Redeemer, as Immanuel, God with us. Such insinuations may be circulated in Kentucky by those who would wish to impair my influence, in supporting a truth more hated by many of the “orthodox and pious” than Socinianism: but here we regard them not. As to my piety, I know I have nothing to boast of; God alone is judge. As to my external deportment, men can judge. And whenever you bring forward any specific charge of immorality, or unchristian deportment, we shall refute it. But as I snail, deo volente, at some future day expatiate on the style and sentiment of your last, I proceed to say, that your reference to your first letter, in relation to the twenty-one questions, is partial; and not altogether correct. You did propose the twenty-one questions in the first instance as you have quoted, but afterwards, you tell me, in the same letter, that you “fairly conclude that (unless suppressed by mutual consent,) they will all be discussed, if we should ever meet.” Query: Have we mutually agreed to suppress them? Or are they to be discussed at our meeting? I request that you will meet me at Washington, the fourteenth day of October, in order to arrange the business, for you have not agreed to meet me on any of the terms proposed in my last. At least you have not informed me so. But you have told me that you are to meet me as “an adversary,” as ho Satanas. Well, I hope you will remember, that when Michael the archangel disputed with the adversary about the body of Moses, he durst not bring against him a railing accusation. As you are celebrated for piety and orthodoxy, and I for want of them, a great deal will be expected from you, and very little from your

Humble Servant,

A. CAMPBELL,
Mr. Campbell was introduced to Mr. Maccalla by Major Davis. They could only agree in the rules published below. Mr. Maccalla would not agree to refer the arrangement of the rules of debate to the moderators. Nor would he agree to open and close and occupy double time. Neither would he allow the moderators to have any controlling power in the direction nor continuance of the discussion. In short, they parted that evening without any final arrangement; to meet upon the ground next day, and proceed some way, they knew not how. Mr. Maccalla's strong argument was, there were no rules attached to Mr. Campbell's challenge, and, consequently, he could not demand any. To insist upon rules was, with Mr. Maccalla, attaching a sine qua non to Mr. Campbell's challenge, a withdrawal of it. Rather than meet in a disorderly manner, at the advice of some friends, Mr. Campbell called on Mr. Maccalla, to concede the point on which they had separated.

Mr. Campbell having called on Mr. Maccalla that same evening, in the house of Mr. Paxton, to inform Mr. Maccalla that he would concede that point for the reason above specified, thought it expedient to inquire of Mr. Maccalla on what grounds he had charged him with Socinianism and insincerity in his last letter. This Mr. Campbell did in the presence of Mr. Paxton, Bishop Sidney Rigdon of Pittsburgh, Bishop William Vaughan of Kentucky, and a number of ladies. The only ground or reason Mr. Maccalla could produce for the first accusation was, that a certain traveling gentleman, whose name could not be given, had told him that Mr. Campbell was a Socinian. Mr. Campbell asked Mr. Maccalla to what part of his writings he had reference, as containing Socinian principles. He observed that Mr. C. had recommended Robertson as an historian; that this Robertson was a Socinian, and that he supposed Mr. C. must agree with him in sentiment. With regard to the charge of insincerity, he had nothing to say.
On Mr. Maccalla's principle of accusing, every one that recommends Hume as an historian must be a deist. Every one that recommends Gibbon as an historian must be an infidel, and every one that recommends Robertson's history of baptism must be a Socinian, especially if some solitary traveler who has rode three hundred miles from home, should say he heard or thought he heard somebody say so.

Mr. Campbell chose Bishop Jeremiah Verdeman as moderator on his part. Mr. Maccalla chose the Rev. James K. Birch on his part, and these two chose Major William Roper, and appointed him president of the board of moderators.

These met under the following regulations:

Rules for conducting a debate betwixt Messrs. W. L. Maccalla and A. Campbell.

I. That each of the parties choose a moderator, and that these two moderators shall appoint a third person, who belongs to neither party, for the purpose of merely keeping order.

II. That A. Campbell open the debate.

III. That each disputant shall have the privilege of speaking thirty minutes, without interruption, unless he is pleased to wave his right.

IV. That whatever books are produced upon the occasion, shall be open to the perusal of each disputant.

V. That the debate shall be adjourned from day to day, until the parties are satisfied.

A. CAMPBELL,
ON CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

ON Wednesday, about twelve o'clock, the weather being fine, the Moderators took their seats in the open air. The congregation were well accommodated on the ground shortly before used for a Methodist camp-meeting.

Silence and good order universally pervading the large assembly, Mr. CAMPBELL thus began: —

MEN, BRETHREN, AND FATHERS,

THROUGH the goodness and mercy of God, I appear before you, at this time, and in this place, for the purpose of contending for a part of that faith, and an item of that religious practice, once delivered to the saints. My prayer to God is, that, for the sake of his Son Jesus Christ, I may speak as I ought to speak; that, in the spirit of the truth I may contend for the truth; that, with humility and love, with zeal according to knowledge and unfeigned devotion, I may open my lips on every occasion when I address my fellow mortal and immortal creatures on the subject of religion. Expecting that they and I will soon appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, may I speak in such a way, that I may not be ashamed nor afraid to meet them there. May I ever act under the influence of that “wisdom which cometh from above, which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and of good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy.” And may you, my friends, hear with impartiality, examine and prove all things, and hold fast that which is good.

The nature and design of our present meeting require that I should intimate to you, respected auditors, the remote and proximate causes that have brought me to this stage of debate. This becomes the more necessary, as reports, prejudicial to my reputation, have been put into circulation, by those who unhappily differ from me in some religious sentiments. I have been represented, and even the gentleman who now has induced my appearance before you, has in his loiters to myself, represented me as one extremely fond of provoking religious controversy: as having put the Peso-baptists to the necessity of coming forward on the defensive, He has, very modestly indeed, done me the honour of comparing me to Goliath of Gath, who defied the armies of the living God to single combat; and himself to the stripling David, who, trusting in the God of Israel, ventured to meet the. mighty Philistine. That I am not worthy of such honour will, I hope, appear from the following documents.

The following letter from elder Birch, once of the state of Ohio, now of the state of Virginia, will show that I did not provoke this controversy with the Pedobaptists.

To the Rev. *Alexander Campbell,

Dear Brother,—I once more undertake to address you by letter, as we are commanded not to be weary in well-doing, I feel disposed to persevere. I am coming this third time unto you. I cannot persuade myself to think that you will refuse to attend to dispute with Mr. Walker, therefore I do not feel disposed to complain because you have sent me no answer. True, I expected an answer, signifying your acceptance of the same. I am as yet disappointed, but am not offended nor discouraged. I can truly say it is the unanimous wish of all the church to which I belong, that you should be the disputant. It is brother Nathaniel Skinner's desire: it is the wish of all the brethren with whom I have conversed, that you should be the man.
You will, I hope, send me an answer by brother Jesse Martin, who has promised to bear this unto you. Come, brother, come over into Macedonia and help us.

Yours, in the best of bonds,

John Birch.

* The term Reverend we disclaim, as not suitable to ourselves nor any other sinner. We publish it here for the sake of making out the extract verbatim, from the original which we had with us on the stage. The tyrant custom leads many of the well-meaning to use it. A Reverend sinner sounds in our ears as dissonant and incongruous as his grace the duke, his majesty the king, his holiness the pope.
From this extract it appears that I was earnestly solicited, yea, thrice requested to dispute with Mr. Walker by the person challenged by Mr. Walker, before I consented to meet him. This letter is open to the inspection of my opponent: it shews that this controversy began not with me.

But I will also read Mr. Walker's letter which he wrote me, when he understood that Mr. Birch had obtained my consent to meet him in public debate. It reads thus:

Mr. Alexander Campbell,

I THINK proper to intimate to you, that I have chosen the Rev. Samuel Findley to preside at the time of our public dispute; you have the privilege of choosing another; you will please to make such choice, and let him meet with Mr. 'Findley prior to the day of public dispute, that we may not be detained. They should determine the manner of dispute, and fix rules by which we should proceed, and preside, not to give judgment, but to keep order.

Yours, with respect,

JOHN WALKER.

The tone and spirit of this epistle shows who was the active and leading party; the dictating party in this controversy. It shows from what quarter the challenge came, and who prescribed the rules of conference. It is from these documents, we presume, sufficiently plain that I did not begin or provoke this controversy. If so, I am unworthy of the honour done me by my opponent, in comparing me to him who challenged the hosts of Israel. And whether he will prove the stripling David this debate will show.

But as I am represented as having given a challenge at Mount Pleasant,* it is necessary to advert to the circumstances accompanying it. The more so, as that challenge has been presented in an unfair light, in the various papers in this state which have notified the public of this discussion.

That the reader may understand the frequent allusions he may meet with in this work to “Mr. Walker” and “Debate at Mount Pleasant,” it is necessary to inform him, that in June, 1820, Mr. A. Campbell held a two-days’ debate with a minister of the secession, named Mr. John Walker, at Mount Pleasant, on the same subject as the present one. At the close of that debate, Mr. Campbell, believing Mr. Walker had not argued the Pedobaptist cause in such a manner as the generality of Pedobaptists would abide by, gave notice of his willingness to debate the subject afresh with any respectable and able minister they might appoint. This led to the present debate with Mr. Maccalla. —ED. Eng. Edit
The following notice, we presume from the pen of Mr. Macalla, does not fairly represent me as respects this controversy.

"From the tenor of a correspondence which we have had with Mr. Campbell, of Virginia, we consider ourselves authorised to inform the public, that, if God permit, Messrs. ALEXANDER CAMPBELL and W. L. MACCALLA of the Baptist and Presbyterian connexions, will meet in the town of Washington, Mason county, Kentucky, for the discussion of the subject and mode of Baptism, according to a general challenge published by the former of these gentlemen, in the following words, viz.; 'I this day publish to all present, that I feel disposed to meet any Pedobaptist minister of any denomination, of good standing in his party, and I engage to prove in a debate with him, either viva voce, or with Ike pen, that infant sprinkling is a human tradition, ami injurious to the well-being of society, religious and political.'

On the part of A. Campbell, A. D. KEITH.

This plainly exhibits me as provoking this controversy. The reason is, my general challenge, as my opponent calls it, is not fully published in its attendant circumstances. This notice begins in the middle of a sentence after a comma. The explanatory members of the sentence are ingeniously, or accidentally lopped off. The following words are wanting in the publication, which are found in the first part of the sentence as it stands in the Debate at Mount Pleasant, 2nd. edit. p. 141, "I have now accepted the invitation or challenge of the seceders, and having now fully satisfied their most eager desires for an interview of this kind, I conceive it is my time to give an invitation or challenge to any Pedobaptist minister; and to return the compliment with the utmost ceremoniousness." So much of the sentence is suppressed, which would have explained the subsequent part of it, or at least have presented it in another light. This part of the sentence would have shewn that I was merely returning the compliment, and not introducing a controversy; whereas, when suppressed, the latter part of the sentence represents me as throwing down the gauntlet and provoking a debate: as a braggadocio or champion challenging the world.
The exciting circumstances of this proclamation were the following:—I had, from a conviction of the propriety of public discussions, agreed to meet Mr. Walker, of Ohio, who stood engaged to prove that “infant sprinkling, or infant baptism is a divine ordinance.” Having found Mr. Walker incompetent to prove this proposition, not only in my own judgment, or in that of the Baptists, but also in the estimation of the disinterested, I conceived it my duty to invite any other Pedobaptist teacher to try to do that which Mr. Walker failed to do. This I did, and I am now before you, pledged to prove that infant sprinkling is a human tradition, and injurious to the wellbeing of society, religious and political.

My present opponent accepted, he says, my general challenge in May last, but our correspondence has been continued until three days before my departure from home for this place, and even then the preliminaries were not adjusted. It was however notified that the time and place were fixed for holding this debate; and owing to the shortness of time, and the stage of water in the Ohio, I was unable to bring any other books than such as could be carried in my portmanteau.

The subject of our present controversy is one that has excited great interest, elicited great zeal, and exhibited uncommon industry on all sides. Some great benefit, either real or imaginary, must be ascribed to infant sprinkling, by those who so ardently contend for it. Before we spend our breath, waste our time, or fatigue our bodies in this discussion, let us know cui bono, for what good, or what benefit to infants we contend. We, Baptists, contend that it is the duty of Christian parents, (and their love to their offspring should prompt them to it,) to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, to pray for them, and to exhibit before them a good example. I acknowledge no man as a Christian that will not perform these delightful duties. But when these duties are performed, we know of no benefit that could be conferred on them by sprinkling a few drops of water upon their faces.

As a father, I love my children as dearly as I think any father ought to do. I would sprinkle them not only once, but seven times, if I thought it would confer any benefit upon them, or contribute to their salvation. I do not speak of sprinkling them with any disrespect. The term I conceive denotes the action. My opponent hinted in his letters... that it is vulgar and impious to call this rite sprinkling. We are for calling things by their appropriate names, if the name be vulgar, the thing is vulgar; if the name be impious, the action is impious. Whatever vulgarity and impiety my opponent conceives to be exhibited in calling the rite for which he contends, infant sprinkling, he ought to consider that the same vulgarity and impiety exist in the practice of it.

As my opponent contends for infant sprinkling, he must think that some benefit is communicated by it. Now as we know of none, it not only becomes him for the sake of consistency to point out numerically, in the first place, in the second, third, and fourth, &c. the advantages resulting from the practice, but it will also add to our zeal, and engage our attention, in discussing the subject. Let us see what is at stake, and then we shall enter into debate with spirit and energy. I trust neither Mr. Maccalla nor myself came hither for the purpose of displaying our talents, or our acquisitions. It was not, we assure you, my friends, for the purpose of exhibiting our strength, or the weakness of my opponent, that induced me to leave my family and visit this place. No such inglorious object could have induced me to undergo the privations and toils of my journey hither. If the physical strength of my opponent was equal to the carrying of two hundred pounds, mine to two hundred and fifty, of what should I boast! Why should I blame him, or praise myself! As there is nothing praiseworthy in bodily strength, so there is nothing culpable in mental imbecility. No, my friends, it is not our own reputation, nor sectarian victory we have in view; it is the triumph of truth, it is the union of Christians on a proper basis. We ardently desire the union of all Christians on the one foundation; we believe infant sprinkling to be a barrier, a stumblingblock in the way, and therefore we wish to see it removed, that those who believe and love the truth may walk in the fellowship of it. But I give way to Mr. Maccalla, that he may point out the use of this rite: if there be no use in the thing, why contend for it? and if there be, God forbid that I should oppose it.

Mr. Maccalla then arose.

Religion, my friends, is a subject of general, of infinite, and of eternal importance. It is the only subject which interests all classes, all ranks and degrees of men alike, Every human being has a soul, and this soul must be happy or miserable for ever. The excellence of religion appears in its suitableness to every human being. It is adapted to the noble and ignoble, and is necessary to the happiness of all. Without it, the most illustrious amongst men are poor and unhappy beings; with it, the most abased amongst men are exalted and ennobled. It is not only of general, of universal, but also of infinite importance. Every thing sublunary which occupies human attention, and commands human respect, is limited in its value, and finite in its advantages; but religion is the inestimable pearl, the invaluable possession, the infinite felicity of all its subjects. It is of eternal excellence. It not only respects man as the passing tenant of this world, as the creature of time, as a mortal being, but it launches forth into eternity, and prepares its happy possessor for a blissful immortality: it views him as the child of immortality, and adapts him for the society of happy immortals. Who then would not admire its excellence, be moved by its importance, and charmed by its superlative glory! Who will not confess that if such be the excellence of religion, that every thing connected with it, that every institution, and every part of it, is worthy of our greatest reverence, of our utmost regard! I come forward, under these impressions of the nature and design of religion, to defend one of its institutions from the charges of our accuser.

Yes, my Pedobaptist friends, our adversary has accused us, has accused the whole Pedobaptist world, with holding and administering a factitious and pernicious ordinance. He has publicly challenged them to stand on their defence. He would now, as you have heard him, endeavor to exonerate himself from having given a challenge to the Pedobaptist world. He says, “I call it a challenge,” but what does he call it? Does he not call it a challenge himself? Hear his own words (Debate at Mount Pleasant, p. 141), “I now,” says he, “conceive it is my time to give an invitation or challenge;” mark, my friends, the word challenge, “to any Pedobaptist minister;”—to any Pedobaptist minister, does not this include the whole Pedobaptist world? Yet you would think from what he has just now said, that he never gave a challenge. It is a challenge, and a tremendous one: it is not only a challenge, but it also contains a base accusation too. It accuses us of a crime; do not startle, my friends, at the word crime; for, in administering baptism to an infant, he says that we practise that which is injurious to the wellbeing of society, religious and political. Yes; we are guilty: he holds us guilty of a crime worthy to be punished by the civil law.

Let us attend to the words of this challenge. Our accuser, in his challenge, has engaged to prove that infant sprinkling is a human tradition. Observe the word tradition: a tradition is any thing handed down, whether in word or writing; whether viva, voce, or with the pen. The apostles called their communications traditions. “Hold the traditions,” said Paul, “which ye have received by word or our epistle.” In this sense, then, every thing in the scriptures is tradition; but they are divine traditions, or which is the same thing, apostolic traditions. Our accuser, however, is not content with calling infant baptism infant sprinkling, or with saving that it is a tradition, but he calls it a human tradition; that is, a tradition of men, something handed down from men only, in which there is no divine authority, for which there is no divine warrant. Not only is the baptizing of infants, as respects the subject, called, by our accusers, a human tradition, but the very mode of administering baptism is called sprinkling, and this sprinkling is called a human tradition; so that the whole institution, as respects subject and mode, is, by our adversaries, called a human tradition.

But this is not the full expression of their resentment,—of their hatred of this holy institution, for our adversary adds another epithet, it is an injurious human tradition. Yes; injurious to every body and to all society, religious and political. What a monstrous evil is this ordinance—a human tradition—an injurious tradition, hurtful to the church, and hurtful to the State. Mr. Campbell, however, stands pledged to prove these four propositions: first, that infants are not the subjects of baptism; secondly, that sprinkling is not baptism; in the third place, that baptizing an infant is injurious to religious and political society; and, in the fourth place, that sprinkling, the very mode itself, is injurious to the church and the world.

He proposed a question, but offered no argument, in his speech to you. This question is a very strange one indeed, coining from my opponent. What good is there in infant baptism? An appeal to reason—yes, and to reason on the expediency and advantage of obeying a divine command. Reason ought not to be appealed to on such matters. It is enough to know that it is commanded. Our duty is to obey, although we could see no propriety in the command — no good result from obedience. In his debate with Mr. Walker he declaims against reasoning on divine commands. He there says, “In positive institutions we are not authorized to reason what we should do, but implicitly to obey. Not whether it be rational or proper to do so, but go, do it.” In positive institutions the divine authority commanding is that which the subject views in his obedience; he also adds, “that on no account whatsoever are we to attempt to reason upon the expediency of the things enjoined, but implicitly to obey on all occasions.” Yet now he asks what good is there in obedience! before he will obey the divine command he must know what he will gain by so doing! I say that reason is not to be appealed to on such occasions. It is enough for me to know that God has commanded infants to be baptized. I know that whatever he has commanded is right, useful, and profitable, and that when we obey the command of God, good will result from it, although I might not be able particularly to define it, or specify what it is. If many who are commanded to obedience in the scriptures would refrain from obedience until they saw the good that would result from it; until they could numerically show first, second, and third; this and that advantage results from it, very few, if any, of the commands of God would ever be obeyed.

With regard to what my opponent has said on the unfairness of the public notice of this debate given in our papers, it is enough for me to say, that his friend and correspondent, Dr. Keith, signed it on his behalf, and that if any thing was amiss in it, he was equally criminal with myself.

Mr. Campbell was to have opened this debate according to our agreement, but he sat down without ever offering one argument in proof of any of the propositions contained in his general challenge. It is true, he talked about many things altogether irrelevant to our dispute, and occupied his time without attempting to do what we should have expected would have been his first effort. As he has, then, sat down without opening the debate, or offering any argument, it becomes my duty to open the debate. Mr. Campbell has declined it for some very important reasons; we shall then proceed to open it.

I came to this place to prove the very contrary of the propositions contained in Mr. Campbell's challenge. I came to prove that infant baptism is a divine ordinance, an institution of heaven, designed for the most important purposes. The subject naturally divides itself into the subject and mode of baptism. All disputants and writers of eminence have taken this method to illustrate and establish from scripture the ordinance of infant baptism. I maintain that faith is not essential to baptism, and that immersion is not essential to baptism. That the infant of a believer is a proper subject, and that sprinkling or pouring is valid baptism. In the establishment of the first proposition or first branch of this subject, I will observe the following method:

In the first place I will produce a divine command for infant baptism; a command of God authorizing infants to be baptized—the infants of believers.

In the second place I will produce probable evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.

In the third and last place under this head, I will produce positive evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.

This is the general method I will pursue in the prosecution of this controversy; subservient to which shall be all the different topics introduced, however remotely they may appear to bear upon the subject.

You will, then, my friends, remember that in the first place, I proceed to produce a divine command for infant baptism. This is the most influential of all authority for any practice. What greater authority can be adduced in favour of any practice, what more imperious than the command of the great God, whose right, whose exclusive right it is, to appoint his own worship, to ordain the institutes thereof, and to accompany all his injunctions with suitable sanctions? It is not human tradition that is an adequate authority to measure our faith, or to regulate our obedience. Our church founds all her decisions, her laws, and her ordinances upon the commands of God, or the explicit declarations of his Spirit, whether found in the Old Testament or in the New: we esteem a command of God as obligatory upon us wherever it may be found. It is the same God that spoke by Moses and by Paul; and his authority is like himself, unchangeable. He has had a church in all generations, constituted by his laws and governed by his statutes. Length of time, of vast antiquity, does not impair his authority, or render his precepts of less weight. A divine command for any practice warrants, requires, and merits our immediate compliance; even where reason discovers no immediate gain, no present acquisition, no palpable benefit. All divine commands are not equally plain, yet they are equally authoritative; and they are all so plain, that when fairly interpreted, they render the despiser or the neglecter without excuse. It must also be acknowledged that some of God's commands have been repealed, consequently not binding upon us; but it must also be remembered, that such of them as are not repealed by his authority are yet in force. There are other peculiarities of the commands of God which are worthy of notice, but of these hereafter. [Mr. M. then sat down.]

Mr. CAMPBELL then proceeded:

Mr. Maccalla has very ingeniously proved that I gave a challenge. And who says that I did not? But Mr. Maccalla was very silent on the point of dispute respecting this challenge. The question is, who first introduced this controversy. The documents I produced must for ever exonerate me from having begun this discussion. It was the Pedobaptists that first challenged the Baptist world. And the only interpretation that candour and honesty can put on the paragraph, cited from the 141st p. of the Debate at Mount Pleasant, is, that we did not claim the honour of having universally, and for ever silenced the Pedobaptists, but that we would give any of them a fair and full opportunity of doing better than Mr. Walker was supposed to have done, if they thought they could make a better argument than he had done. This I did. And I must persist in saying, that Mr. Maccalla's first letter to me, is as fully an original challenge as that given by me. But as Mr. Maccalla in his address to you did not so much as allude to the question, who first gave a challenge, but occupied his remarks in proving what was not denied, we presume this point is settled without contradiction.

But, my Pedobaptist friends, there is something in my opponent's address that I exceedingly lament, on your account. I discover the spirit and design of a considerable part of it is, to arouse your passions at the expense of your judgment; to lead you to view my challenge as an accusation against the whole Pedobaptist world, and myself as an accuser; that I have charged you with a crime worthy of punishment by the civil law. My opponent appears to be so well acquainted with human nature, as to calculate a good deal upon bribing your judgment in this debate, by a present to your passions. If he succeeds in leading you to consider me your accuser; my challenge an accusation; and your practice as judged and pronounced by me criminal; if he succeeds in persuading you to consider himself as your defender; his speeches, as a defence of your practice; his whole efforts as designed to free you from calumny; he wisely calculates that he has gained half the point in securing his dominion over you. Our design, my Pedobaptist friends, is not to widen the breach, or to throw stumblingblocks in the way, by inflaming our passions; but to endeavor to lead you to understand this most important institution of the Lord of glory, that whosoever of you feareth God may unite with us in keeping his commandments, as delivered unto us by his holy apostles.

Instead of pointing us to the good effects and benefits of infant baptism, as was requested in my first address, he has entertained us with a disquisition on the impropriety of appealing to reason on such matters; and that too by a reference to my remarks in debate with Mr. Walker on positive institutions.

I am well pleased to find that my opponent and I agree so well on the nature of positive institutions. I request the congregation to keep in mind that my opponent has declared that in positive institutions, “reason is not to be appealed to in such matters. It is enough to know that it is commanded. Our duty is to obey, although we see no propriety in the command, no good result from obedience.” This is an excellent sentiment, and we shall likely have use for its appearance again in this controversy. It, however, appears on this occasion entirely out of place. When I asked my opponent to enumerate the benefits of infant sprinkling, I did not call upon him to appeal to reason, but, to revelation. His reply is, in fact, a concession that revelation says nothing about them, and, very judiciously indeed, he refuses to appeal to reason; for reason would be as silent upon the benefits derived to infants from sprinkling, as revelation. We must compliment his ingenuity upon this occasion, and thank him for his beautiful episode upon positive institutions. Had he, however, demanded of me the benefits derived to believers from baptism, I would have immediately made my appeal to revelation; and in numerical order exhibited the chief.

Mr. Maccalla would have you think that I sat down without opening this debate,—without submitting an argument.
My remarks, it is true, were chiefly prefatory; yet I conceive there was an opening of the debate, and some argument in my introduction. If I did not open the debate, with whom was he debating in his speech? And as to argument, it is true I did not submit one in the form of a syllogism, yet I conceive the strongest argument in the world was presented against the practice of the Pedobaptists. It was modestly affirmed that infant sprinkling was a useless practice; that there was no benefit resulting to the infant from it. My opponent affirms, necessarily affirms, that there is a benefit in it. Now, the proof always lies on the affirmer. I think there is no argument which can be adduced against any practice, or any undertaking stronger or more convincing than such a practice, or such an undertaking is useless, altogether useless. Suppose, for illustration, a man were, about building a house upon the ice, which is practicable in many places. He might give it the most tasty form; he might divide it into the most convenient and elegant chambers; he might display the most correct and delicate taste in its internal arrangements, in its external figure and appearance. When about to engage in the accomplishment of his design, or while in the act of prosecuting his plan, suppose some person acquainted with the climate, and possessed of what is called common sense, would tell him the whole project, the whole enterprize was an useless one; for as soon as the western zephyrs would breathe upon the foundation, yield it must to their influence, and down must come the whole superstructure. I say, what argument could be more powerful against his project than that it was useless, or without benefit! And as my opponent has produced no benefit, no advantage, to be derived to infants from sprinkling, or from baptism, we gained, in our first encounter, the strongest of all arguments against his practice.

But as my opponent complains that I have not opened the debate, and as I was compelled to consent to open the debate, contrary to my sense of propriety, or else it appeared we should have had none, as our correspondence will demonstrate, I will proceed to do it in a more formal manner; and as my opponent has been telling us his method of conducting the debate, though he himself has produced no argument as yet in support of his theses, consequently on his own principles has not opened it, I will submit my method of procedure in this controversy.
But I will first premise a few things, merely, however, to fix on certain principles to which we may appeal in any mailer of doubtful disputation. I have not to consult my opponent on these, as they are already sworn to, or avowed by my opponent. I therefore take that Confession of Faith which he has solemnly vowed to teach, and vowed to be (according to his belief) the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures; and from it I will select such general rules as may be pertinent to this discussion.

Presbyterian Confession of Faith, chap. i. sect. 7. “All things in Scripture are not alike plain in themselves, nor alike clear unto nil; yet those things which are necessary to be known, believed, and observed for salvation, are so clearly propounded and opened in some place of Scripture or other, that not only the learned but the unlearned, in a due use of the ordinary means may attain unto a sufficient understanding of them.” You will then bear in mind, my friends, that my opponent considers you all competent judges of scripture testimony, in a due use of the ordinary means: and, without any commentator or religious teacher, his confession of faith declares, that, though you were unlearned, you may attain unto a knowledge of the things necessary to be known, believed, and observed for salvation; because all those things are “so clearly propounded and opened in some place of scripture or other.

In the same confession, and in the same chapter, sect. 5), you will find the following most excellent sentiment: “The infallible rule of interpretation of scripture is the scripture itself; and, therefore, when there is a question about the true and full sense of any scripture which is not manifold, but ONE, it may be searched and known by other places that speak more clearly.” This article embraces one of the best rules of interpretation we have seen. The sense of every passage of scripture is ONE, not two, three, or manifold. How many thousands of volumes of sermons, and interpretations of scripture would it send to the flames, or to the moths, if it were duly recognized and acted upon! There is but ONE meaning in every passage of scripture, and that, one meaning must be always found from its context. This golden rule of interpretation, recognized and acted upon, and controversy about the meaning of scripture becomes fair and easily managed. To these articles we shall appeal in all matters of disputation about the meaning of scriptures.
adduced in this controversy. I feel myself happy to think that my opponent must admit them, or abjure his allegiance to the Presbyterian church.

My text will be found in the twenty-eighth chapter of the Confession of Faith, first verse, and first clause. “Baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament, ordained by Jesus Christ.” The term sacrament is the only term in our text on which we shall offer a comment. The term sacrament we shall define first, generally, as signifying any holy thing; secondly, specially, it signifies a holy ordinance. Our text, then, as defined, reads—“Baptism is a holy ordinance of the New Testament, ordained by Jesus Christ.” In handling this text polemically, and in proving the propositions contained in our general challenge, we shall observe the following method: —

1st. We shall go to the New Testament, and not to the Old, to ascertain the nature, design, and subject of this ordinance.

2nd. We shall appeal to the words of Jesus Christ for the institution of baptism, as our text says it is an ordinance of Jesus Christ; we shall have nothing to do with Moses in this matter, however useful he may be in others. No doubt our opponent will feel his creed honoured, and will acquiesce in our method as correct.

In proving the points contained in my challenge, I will first prove that a believer is the only subject of baptism.

In the second place, that immersion is the only baptism.

In the third place, that infant baptism, or infant sprinkling, is injurious to society, religious and political. These points being established, and it necessarily follows that infant sprinkling is a human tradition, and injurious, &c.

In establishing the first point, that a believer is the only subject of baptism, I will, according to my text, appeal exclusively to the New Testament; and reason itself will justify me in this particular; for who would go to the Old Testament to find an ordinance which is not in it, and which belongs exclusively to the New! In the first place, under this head, I will appeal directly to the law of Christ concerning this ordinance of his, which I find in the commission to baptize. Matt. xxviii. 18—20, Jesus said, “All authority in heaven and in earth is given unto me. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, (or make disciples out of all nations) baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, unto the end of the world.” We shall also read the commission, or law of Christian baptism, as recorded by Mark xvi. 15, 16. “Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned.”

The law of baptism, then, authorizes none but disciples or believers to be baptized.

Having now, according to my text, read the law of baptism, from Him, whose ordinance the Confession says it is, I will in the next place read the practice of those persons to whom He first gave the law; and who, He said, should be witnesses for Him, in Judea, and Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth. We shall just follow them to Judea, thence to Samaria, and thence to the Gentiles, the uttermost parts of the earth, and see whom they baptized.

To Judea.—In Jerusalem, the metropolis of Judea, we read, Acts ii. 41. When Peter preached the gospel first to the Jews, we are told—“that they who gladly received his word were baptized, and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.” Thus the apostles began to act under the law of baptism. They baptized only those who gladly received the gospel, believed it, or became disciples of Christ.

To Samaria. —Acts viii. 12. “But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.”

To Ethiopia. —Acts viii. 36. “See,” says the Ethiopian eunuch, “here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? Philip said, if thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.” Then Philip baptized him.

To the uttermost parts of the earth. —The gentiles, in Cornelius’ house, Acts x. 47. When they believed the gospel which Peter preached, Peter says, “can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we?” And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.

To Philippi. —And when the Lord opened Lydia’s heart, we are told, Acts xvi. 14, that “she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul, and then she was baptized and her household.” And Acts xvi. 31, they said to the jailer, “believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shall be saved, and thy house, and they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in the house. And he took them, the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes, and was baptized, he and all his straightway.

To Corinth. —Acts xviii. 8. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house, and many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were baptized.”

My time forbids me now to make any remarks upon these testimonies; we see, at the first glance, whom the apostles baptized under the law of Christ. Let my opponent now read, in the New Testament, such passages as speak of infants as subjects of baptism. I give place to him to read the New Testament records of infant baptism.

Mr. MACCALLA then arose: —

I will read you, my friends, an extract from Mr. Robinson, the greatest Baptist historian in the world, pp. 367, 363. This extract will show you how infant baptism has been attacked, with what reproaches it has been loaded, with what insolence and contempt it has been treated, and it will also exhibit to you what kind of spirit our adversaries possess. It reads thus: —

“Soon after the passing of the conventicle act, a Baptist, named Headach, a man of fortune and reputation, was accused of having spoken treasonable words by a pretended brother, named John Poulter. Headach was ready to be arraigned at the bar on the oath of Poulter, and of course to lose both his estate and his life, when all on a sudden Poulter disappeared. It was soon found that Poulter was the son of a butcher in Salisbury; that he was there reputed one of the most debauched and profligate of mankind; that he had turned informer, and had been employed by Dr. Mew, then vice-chancellor of Oxford, and Judge Morton, who used to call him John for the king, to obtain in the county of Bucks a full account of what number of dissenting meetings there were; in what places they were held; what number of persons attended them; of what rank; whether of estate; where they resided, and so forth. Poulter, like the rest of his order, was sometimes a Quaker and sometimes a Baptist, and when he was found out in one country, he shifted quarters, and acted the same part in others, always protected and supported by some great persecuters then in power. Having committed many other crimes, and been guilty of many felonies, which came to light at once, he fled the country. Headach was dismissed; and among other exploits it was found Poulter had, in contempt of infant baptism, christened a cat, and, in derision of the queen, had named it Catherine Catherina. So zealous an enemy was this pretended Baptist to infant baptism and civil tyranny over conscience.

Paul Hobson's soldiers christened a colt that was foaled in St. Paul's church, by sprinkling it with water which he had made in his helmet, in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and because it was a bald colt, he named it Baal Rex.

Captain Beaumont and his soldiers, in 1644, christened a colt at the font in Yakesley church, Huntingdonshire, in the same manner, with the same sort of water, calling him, because he was hairy, Baal Esau.

History mentions ancient mockeries of baptism, but they were very different from these. Prynne collected two from Nicholas Cabasila. “It is recorded of one Porphyry, a pagan stage-player, that he grew to such an height of impiety, that he adventured to baptize himself in jest upon the stage, of purpose to make the people laugh at Christian baptism, and so to bring both it and Christianity into contempt; and for this purpose he plunged himself into a vessel of water which he had placed on the stage, calling aloud upon the Trinity, at which the spectators fell into great laughter. But, lo, the goodness of God to this profane miscreant! It pleased God to shew such a demonstration of his power and grace upon him, that this sporting baptism of his became a serious laver of regeneration to him, insomuch that of a graceless player he became a gracious Christian; and not long after a constant martyr.”—Credat Judaeus Apella.

“The like I find registered of one Ardalion, another heathen actor, who, in derision of the holy sacrament of baptism, baptized himself in jest upon the stage, and by that means became a Christian; God's mercy turning this his wickedness to his eternal good.”—Credat Judaeus Apella, non ego.

I hope this extract will not offend our moderators; we know, indeed, that it is not suitable to be read in the audience of any respectable assembly, but Mr. Robinson, a Baptist, has written it, and we are justifiable in reading it upon the present occasion, as it is so similar to many things said by our present adversary in his publication of the debate with Mr. Walker.

[Here bishop Verdeman, one of the moderators, addressed Mr. Maccalla, saying that he might read of the baptism of cats and colts as much as he pleased, provided he would drop the use of two words, of which he was in frequent use, these are the words adversaries and accusers. Mr. Verdeman observed, that he thought it very illiberal to represent the Baptists as accusers and adversaries of the Pedobaptists, and to call his opponent, Mr. Campbell, an adversary and an accuser. Mr. Maccalla must know that these are names given in Scripture to Satan, who is called “the adversary” and “the accuser of the brethren.” He thought that Mr. Maccalla should treat his opponent as a gentleman and as a Christian, although he differed from him on the questions under discussion. He hoped, therefore, that he would substitute the term opponent or any term less acrimonious, more consistent with candour and justice, in place of those offensive terms.

Something intended as an excuse for Mr. Maccalla was said by the Rev. Mr. Birch, but as no notes were taken of it, our recollection will not permit us to attempt a statement of his remarks.

Major Roper, the president of the board of moderators, whose right it was to decide when any difference occurred between the other moderators, gave it as his opinion, that, however justifiable Mr. Maccalla might be in calling Mr. Campbell his accuser, it was certainly unwarrantable and indecorous to denominate the Baptist denomination as accusers and adversaries. He hoped, therefore, that Mr. Maccalla would dispense with the use of those terms.

Mr. Maccalla said, in his own defence, that he had used the terms for the purpose of obtaining such a decision respecting Mr. Campbell as the president of the board had now given; and that being pleased, very much pleased, with the remarks of the president of the bench, he would desist from the use of those terms.]

* See page 17. In his letter Mr. Maccalla calls the Baptists his adversaries, so that he must have used these terms for a long time in order to obtain this decision.
Mr. Maccalla resumed his reading: — I was about to read to you an extract from the Debate at Mount Pleasant, breathing the same spirit of that read from Robinson, the Socinian. It is indeed taken from Robinson, p. 193.

“Bill of fare of a dinner at Tynningham, the house of the Right Honourable the Earl of Haddington, on Thursday, the 21st of August, 1679, when his lordship's son was baptized:

This is the way that our opponents take to ridicule and lampoon infant baptism. These are strong arguments, yes, these are the convincing arguments.

According to the method I proposed in my last address, I will proceed to the first head of my method, which was to shew that there is a divine command for infant baptism.

In the first place, I would observe, that there is a difference in divine commands; some of them are express, and others are not express. Some of them, in so many words, expressly command certain duties to be performed, and even the very way and manner in which they are to be performed is expressly propounded, as were many of the commands given to the Jews, respecting their worship in its various ordinances. Thus it was with respect to the construction of the tabernacle and its numerous utensils. Thus it was with respect to the ordination of the Jewish priesthood and their various duties. Thus it was with respect to the nature of their sacrifices, their different objects, and manner of presentation. Commands equally express were published with respect to moral duties, as were the commands in the decalogue. But beside these, there were many things divinely commanded which were not express, but were to be taught and learned from the import of sundry declarations in which there was much scope given to the exercise of the rational faculties of man; and which were to be ascertained from a minute attention to many circumstances. For instance, there is no express declaration of the unity of God to be found in the Old Testament; no express proof in so many words; yet we know this truth to be a part of divine revelation, as certainly as though it were expressly declared in so many words. Nor is there any express command against duelling in all the word of God; yet we are as certain that God has prohibited this mischievous practice, as though it were expressly prohibited. Nor is there any express command against gaming in the Bible, and what Christian is there who does not know that it is divinely prohibited? There is no express law authorizing Christians to eat pork, and does not every Christian eat pork with a good conscience, with as much liberty as though “God had expressly said ye may eat pork! Nor is there any express command for independent church government, Cor which many so earnestly contend, as divinely appointed. There is no express law for the observance of the first day of the week as the Christian sabbath; for female communion, and many other points zealously contended for by the Baptists and Pedobaptists. In the same manner, we affirm, that although there is no express command for baptism, though it is not mentioned in the Old Testament, yet we can find a divine command for it there.

When we propose to produce a divine command for infant baptism, you are not, my friends, to expect that we shall produce, in so many words, a command for parents to have their children baptized. You will however plainly see that there is a divine command for this practice by attending to the proof of the following propositions; for, from the five following propositions, we shall very clearly infer a divine command for infant baptism. We will prove at least that infants, the infants of believers, are proper subjects of baptism. To the discussion of the following propositions we ardently request your attention; —

1. Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true visible church of God.
2. The Christian church is a branch of the Abrahamic church, or in other words, the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are one and the same church in different dispensations.
3. Jewish circumcision before Christ, and Christian baptism after Christ, are one and the same seal, though in different forms.

4. The administration of this seal to infants was once enjoined by divine authority.

5. The administration of this seal to infants was never prohibited by divine authority.

You will readily perceive that if the seed of Abraham were divinely constituted a true visible church; and if the Jewish and Christian church are one and the same church; and if the seal of circumcision and baptism are one and the same seal in substance; and that this seal was once ordained of God, and was never afterwards prohibited, I say you will then perceive that we have, if not an express command, at least a divine command for baptizing infants.

But as we must be at considerable pains in laying a good foundation, and in proving, in the most explicit manner, the truth of these propositions, we shall take them up separately, beginning with the first.

The first proposition you will keep in mind is this: Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true visible church.

You must not, however, suppose that all the seed of Abraham were divinely constituted a visible church, for some of them were never taken into the covenant with Abraham, and others of them that were once taken in, were afterwards excommunicated from this church. Abraham was the father of many nations, as well as the father of the holy nation, and the kingdom of priests, which is in scripture called the church, Abraham had different wives, Sarah, Hagar, and Keturah, these all left issue to Abraham. Sarah bare Isaac; Hagar bare Ishmael; and Keturah bare him six sons. Now, not all the sons of Abraham were divinely constituted a true visible church, for with Isaac only was the covenant confirmed. And even of the posterity of Isaac some were excluded or excommunicated; as, for instance, the Edomites, who sprang from Esau, and dwelt after their excommunication upon Mount Seir. [Mr. M's. time expired.]

Mr. Campbell then addressed the congregation. So then my opponent is determined to affirm his own propositions, and not to deny mine. He will not attack my arguments nor respond to my address. What is the meaning of all this? Why did he contend with me so long in his correspondence on the necessity of my opening the debate? Is it possible that he is going to read all the time out of this manuscript he has in his hand; that he has all his arguments written down, and will not abandon the course he has prescribed to himself!—So then he debates with the pew, and I viva voce; or rather, he reads his arguments and dares not attack mine. And instead of reading the passages in the New Testament that speak of infant baptism, as I have done those, or, at least, some of those which speak of believers, or of disciples, as the proper subjects, as the exclusive subjects of baptism, he has read from Robinson's history, of the sprinkling of cats and colts!! I say is it possible that he could find no passages in the New Testament to read respecting infants being subjects of baptism; but to cover his retreat, and to inflame the minds of a part of his auditors, has been obliged to read the above passage out of Robinson's history of insults offered to infant baptism, and also to immersion!! And yet, after all the torrent of abuse poured on Mr. Robinson and myself, by my opponent, for the spirit which he says those extracts exhibit towards his people, one of themselves, to wit, the great Dr. Wall, in his history of infant baptism, abuses the Pedobaptists much more than any thing in Robinson's history, or in the debate at Mount Pleasant, which has yet been read, or which can be read by Mr. Maccalla. Hear, my friends, hear Dr. Wall, the celebrated Pedobaptist, who was dubbed D. D. for his history of infant baptism. —“There has no novelty or alteration that I know of, in point of baptism, been brought into the church, but in the way and manner of administering it. The way that is now ordinarily used, we cannot deny to have been a novelty, brought into the church (of England) by those that learned it in Germany, or at Geneva. And they were riot contented with following the example of pouring a quantity of water, which had there been introduced instead of immersion, but improved it (if I may so abuse that word) from pouring to sprinkling, that it might have as little resemblance of the ancient way of baptizing as possible.”—“And another struggle,” says he, “whether the child shall be dipped or sprinkled, will be with the midwives and nurses. These will use all the interest they have with the mothers, which is very great, to dissuade them from agreeing to the dipping of the child. I know of no reason, unless it be this, a thing which they value themselves, and their skill much upon, is the neat dressing of the child on the christening-day, the setting all the trimming, the pins, and the laces, in their order. And if the child be brought in loose clothes, which may be presently taken off, for the baptism, and put on again, this pride is lost. And this makes a reason. So little is the solemnity of the sacrament regarded by many, who mind nothing but the dress, and the eating, and drinking.” So, indeed, Dr. Wall accuses, shall I say, or abuses the Pedobaptists; at least he declares that many of them are concerned more about the dressing, and decorating of the infant subject of baptism, than about the ordinance, and that many of them mind nothing but the dress and the eating and drinking. Let Mr. Maccalla produce any baptist writer who has said any thing so severe, or so tart, against those he defends as the good Dr. Wall.

Mr. Maccalla’s divine command for infant baptism began to recede from our view, soon as he began to read about his not express command. I confess I felt somewhat elevated, and not a little astonished, when I heard him propose to give a divine command for infant baptism. But from his disquisition on express and not express commands, I have quite recovered from my surprise. I am much mistaken, if his divine command will not come out at last no command at all. But we shall wait patiently for its appearance, He would place the unity of God and infant baptism upon the same obscure footing. No express revelation of either. Did he ever read, “Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is ONE Lord.” But, in fact, there call be nothing more absurd than to place the “eating of pork,” and the “baptizing of infants,” upon one and the same footing: or the prohibition of gaining and duelling upon the same basis with the sprinkling of infants. Where is the fine episode on positive institutes that we heard from Mr. Maccalla some time ago! He was prepared with a quotation from my debate with Mr. Walker, to show, that, on positive duties or institutes, we were not left to reason to find them out. He might have observed that the passage referred to, at that time, in the 46th p., would have obviated his remarks on moral duties and have shown when express commands were necessary The conclusion of the passage referred to, thus reads: “In positive institutions, the divine authority commanding, is that which the subject views in his obedience; in moral
ON BAPTISM.

precepts he views, also, the rational and moral use and beauty of the duty commanded. In positive institutions, we are not authorised to reason what we should do, but implicitly to obey. 'See, (said God to Moses,) that thou makest all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the Mount.' Not whether it be rational or proper to do so, but go, do it. In moral requirements, we are clearly shewn and commanded to perform certain duties, but left at liberty to reason, to ascertain in what these duties consist. A man is not to reason whether or not he should be honest or just, but to reason to know in what honesty and justice consist. Hence, the apostle Paul gives us general rules, which, by our own reason, we are to apply to particular occasions, such as Philip, iv. 8, 'Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if any praise, think on these things.' Here we have general rules, left to be filled up by our own reflection and reason.” To these remarks I will add those of two Pedobaptist dignitaries, bishop Hoadly, and bishop Taylor. Bishop Hoadly says, “All positive duties depend entirely upon the will and declaration of the person who institutes or ordains them, with respect to the real design and end of them; and, consequently, to the due manner of performing them.” Speaking of the Lord’s supper, he says, “It cannot be doubted Jesus Christ sufficiently declared to his first and immediate followers, the whole of what he designed should be understood by, or implied in, this duty; for this being a positive institution, depending entirely upon his will, and not designed to contain any thing in it, but what he himself should please to affix to it, it must follow that he declared his mind about it fully and plainly; because, otherwise, he must be supposed to institute a duty, of which no one could have any notion without his instruction, and at the same time not to instruct his followers sufficiently what that duty was to be.”* On this passage Mr. Chapin, a Congregationalist, who became a Baptist, observes, “His lordship has here expressed truths which are equally applicable to baptism, and which no one can easily refute.” p. 9.

Bishop Taylor’s words are, “All institutions, sacramental and positive laws, depend wholly on the will of the lawgiver, and the will of the supreme, being actually limited to (his specification, this manner, this matter, this institution: whatsoever comes besides, it hath no foundation in the will of the legislator, and therefore can have no warrant or authority. That it be obeyed or not obeyed is all the question and all the variety. If it can be obeyed, it must; if it cannot, it must be left alone. He that does any thing of his own head, either must be a despiser of God's will, or must suppose himself the author of a grace, or else to do nothing at all, in what he does, because all his obedience, and all the blessings of his obedience, depend upon the will of God, which ought always to be obeyed when it can, and when it cannot, nothing can supply it, because the will of the lawgiver is all the reason for obedience.*

From the words of these learned Pedobaptists, nothing short of an express divine command can authorize a positive institute; so that Mr. Maccalla's not express, but illogical, inferential, divine command will avail nothing when it comes,

My opponent has certainly abandoned his confession of faith. My text was taken from it, on the supposition that he believed it, and that its authority was felt and acknowledged by him. Has he recanted it, my Pedobaptist friends? Has he not solemnly vowed his belief of it as (the system of doctrine taught in the Bible? Has he not promised, solemnly promised to teach the doctrines which it contains? Does it not say that baptism is an ordinance of the New Testament? Why then does he go to the Old Testament to find it? Does it not say that baptism was ordained by Jesus Christ? Why then does he go to Abraham and to Moses to authorize it? Does he not, in his first proposition, make it an ordinance of Moses, or of the Jewish church? Does he not originate it in the law of circumcision? Why then pledge himself to teach that “baptism is an ordinance of the New Testament ordained by Jesus Christ?” or does the phrase New Testament mean both the Old and the New? And does the name Jesus Christ mean both Moses and the Messiah?

I see from the course or method projected by Mr. Maccalla that the information I had, a day or two ago, concerning the quantity of matter he had prepared for this” debate, was correct. I heard from a respectable source, that my opponent boasted that he had “eight days' matter prepared,” that the discussion of his “matter” would require eight days! Indeed, soon as I heard him read his five propositions, I felt assured that this discussion would he tedious beyond all necessary bounds. These five propositions are the first five questions of the twenty-one proposed in his first letter to me, merely changed from the form of questions into that of propositions. From the correspondence, I had thought, when he refused to discuss the twenty-one questions which I proposed, that he had abandoned the idea of proposing his twenty-one. But it appears they are coming forward in another form. To save time, I will answer them all with a yea or a nay, and let us come to some interesting point of discussion. Let Mr. Maccalla propose them one by one, and I will say yea or nay to each of them, and then perhaps he will reply to me.

But he should remember that I have opened the debate in due form, and submitted, from the New Testament, the law of baptism. I have also read the practice of the original witnesses in Judea, Samaria, and in the uttermost parts of the earth; which clearly shows in what manner they understood the law of baptism, which law authorizes the baptism of disciples only. I have called, and re-called, upon my opponent to read his authorities from the New Testament for infant baptism, and will again sit down before my time expires to hear him read those records in favour of his practice.

Mr. Maccalla arose: —

I believe the Old Testament to be the word of God as well as the New. And a command of God by Moses, and a command by Paul, are equally the commands of God, and entitled to obedience. But as nothing will suit my opponent but what comes from the New Testament, and as he has read the commission to baptize disciples, it might suffice to tell him, that infants as well as adults are disciples, at least, I am able to prove from the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, that infants are called disciples. “Why,” says the apostle, “tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples?” Now we know that this yoke was circumcision, and that infants were equally, to say the least, under this law with their parents. Again, the Saviour saith, “Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God.” And Paul says that some infants are holy, consequently fit subjects of baptism. But as I have opened the debate and proposed the plan on which to proceed, I will go on to establish my first proposition: viz. Abraham and his seed ware divinely constituted a true visible church of God. Mr. Campbell has said a great deal about my reading notes, and having a manuscript in my hand. It is true I have a little book here made up of a few sheets of paper closely written, and yet it is not all written, some part of it is blank. But my opponent has notes too. I see a book in his hand with questions to Maccalla written on it, why then complain of me having notes and reading from a manuscript? I suppose he intends to make use of his notes sometime in this debate. My opponent has said that he will answer the questions contained in these propositions with a yea or a nay. I would wish to know how he will answer this one:—Were Abraham and his seed divinely constituted a true and visible church?

Mr. Campbell answered forthwith, that a part of the seed of Abraham was divinely constituted a true, visible church of God, but not all his seed.

Will you, said Mr. Maccalla, admit that a part of the seed of Abraham, as I have defined that part, was constituted a visible church of God?

Mr. Campbell answered:—Read your definition of that part of his seed again, and I will give you an explicit answer.

Mr. Maccalla then read, that all the seed of Abraham, with the exception of such as were afterwards excommunicated, was constituted a true, visible church of God.

Mr. Campbell objected to the term excommunicated, as not being applicable to the Jews in Abraham’s time,—as being a modern ecclesiastical term, too vague in its meaning and of doubtful disputation, when used in such a connexion of ideas; but observed, that if Mr. Maccalla would alter his proposition so far as to insert the word part before the seed of Abraham, that he would, in order to save time and avoid unnecessary disputation, without hesitation say that a part of the seed of Abraham was divinely constituted a true church of God.

Mr. Maccalla observed, that unless the question was answered with an unequivocal yes in the terms he had proposed, he would proceed to prove the proposition; as he was determined to build strong bulwarks in his rear, that his conclusions might be unassailable.

Mr. Campbell replied, prove it then, but it is altogether unnecessary, inasmuch as I have admitted every thing that could affect the argument.

Mr. Maccalla went on with his proof:—There are certain peculiarities necessary to a church state. It is not every assembly that may or can exist that is a church of God. No, indeed, for then a mob, a riotous assembly, a political convention, a civil court, or any ordinary meeting might be called a church of God.

The first thing necessary to the existence of a visible church of God is, that the oracles of God be possessed by those who unite together in a church state. Without this acquisition, let a society possess what advantages it may, it cannot be called a church For all knowledge of God, faith in him, and devotion to him, grow out of the possession of (he oracles of God. That the seed of Abraham had these oracles committed to them we will prove both from the Old Testament and the New. Psalm lxxviii. 5—8. “He,” said David the prophet, “established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers that they should make them known to their children. That the generation lo come might know them, even the children which should be born, who should arise and declare them to their children; that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God but keep his commandments; and might not be as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation, that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not steadfast with God.” You will observe, my hearers, that it is expressly said, by David the prophet, that a testimony was established in Jacob, and a law appointed in Israel, which was to be perpetuated from generation to generation, and to be taught by parents to their children in every age.

To the same purpose speaketh Moses, Deut. xxx. 19, “I call heaven and earth to record this day against you.
that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing, therefore choose life that both thou and thy seed may live; that thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him; (for he is thy life and the length of thy days) that thou mayest dwell in the land which the Lord swear unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob to give them.” And again, Deut. xxxii. 46. “And Moses said unto them, set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day; which ye shall command your children lo observe to do all the words of this law.” From these words we not only see that testimonies and laws were given unto Israel, and to be continued among them in their generations, but we see with what earnestness and desire Moses commits this charge unto Israel, assuring them that their life and felicity consisted in making a due use of those sacred oracles.

A more explicit testimony to this effect we have in Neh. ix. 13, 14. “Thou earnest down also upon mount Sinai and speakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments and true laws, (or laws of truth) good statutes and commandments; and madest known unto them thy holy sabbath, and commandest them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant,” This is so plain that no comment is necessary. In the same clear definite style sings David. Ps. cxlvi, 19, 20, “He sheweth his words unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel, He hath not dealt so with any other nation; and as for his judgments they have not known them.” This, sheweth, not only that God committed his oracles to the seed of Abraham, but to them exclusively; and that no other nation could worship the true God without his oracles, consequently no other nation but that of Israel could be a church of God.

The New Testament is equally, if not more explicit in proof of this proposition.
Acts vii, 38. “This is he that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel which spake to him in the mount Sinai, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us.” This last clause is what we have particularly in view here.
The lively oracles were received by Moses and given to the Jews.

Stephen also, the proto-martyr, in the same speech; Acts
vii. 53. tells Israel, “that (hey had received the law by the disposition of angels, and had not kept it.”

But Paul, in his epistle to the Romans, chap. iii. settles the point at once. He asks the question, “what advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there in circumcision; much every way: chiefly because that unto them were committed the oracles of God. And in the ninth chapter of the same epistle, he saith “that the giving of the law pertaineth unto Israel.” Thus, in v friends, we have proved the first point necessary to show that Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true visible church—because they had the oracles of a church committed to them.

In the second place, I proceed to show that they had the second thing necessary to a church state, namely, the ordinances of a church.

To say nothing of the ordinance of circumcision, which, though not a social ordinance of worship, was, nevertheless, an ordinance divinely appointed to the seed of Abraham; we shall proceed to the social ordinances that belong to, and require, a church state. Of these the first, is the ordinance of the passover. Ex. xii. 1—14. “And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying, this month shall be unto you the beginning of months: it shall be the first mouth of the year to you. Speak ye unto all the congregation of Israel, saying, in the tenth day of this month they shall take to them every man a lamb, according to the house of their fathers, a lamb for an house; and if the household be too little for a lamb, let him and his neighbour next unto his house take it according to the number of souls; every man according to his eating shall make your count for the lamb. Your lamb must be without blemish, a male of the first year: ye shall take it out from the sheep, or from the goats: and ye shall keep it until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel shall kill it in the evening. And they shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts, and on the upper door post of the houses wherein they shall eat it. And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and unleavened bread; and with bitter herbs they shall eat it. Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenances thereof. And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning; and that which remaineth of it until the morning... ye shall burn with fire. And thus shall ye eat it: with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste; it is the Lord's passover. One law shall be to him that is homeborn, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you.” This ordinance was to he kept for ever in all the generations of Israel, and it was a social ordinance, a church ordinance, a significant ordinance.
Hear Moses again, verse 24—27. “And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons forever. And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the Lord will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service. And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, what mean ye by this service? that ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the Lord's passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians and delivered our houses. And the people bowed the head and worshiped.”

The next ordinance enjoined upon the seed of Abraham was the feast of unleavened bread—a social ordinance, and an holy convocation. “Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel. And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you. And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt; therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance for ever. In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or born in the land. Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread.”—Ex. xii. 15—20. This was a significant commemorative social ordinance of divine worship.

We shall notice next the ordinance of the Sabbath, for it is given to Israel not only in the law, with other precepts, but it was given as an ordinance. We shall read to this effect. “Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.”—Ex. xxxi. 12—17. “And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm. Therefore, the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.” To the same purpose Ezekiel the prophet, xx, and 12th, in addition to the statutes and judgments given them, the Lord saith, “Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between them and me, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.”

The next religious festival or ordinance appointed the Jews, of which we shall take notice, is the “feast of weeks,” or as it is sometimes called, the “feast of Pentecost.” “And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven sabbaths shall be complete; even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord. Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenth deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baken with leaven; they are the first fruits unto the Lord. And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, with their meat offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire, of sweet savour unto the Lord. Then ye shall sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offering. And the priest, shall wave them with the bread of the first fruits for a wave-offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priest. And ye shall proclaim on the selfsame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you; ye shall do no servile work therein; it shall be a statute forever in all your dwellings throughout your generations.”—Lev. xxiii. 15—21.
Next the feast of tabernacles: “And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto the children of Israel, saying, the fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the Lord. On the first day shall be an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein. Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: on the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you; and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no work therein. These are the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt-offering and a meatoffering, a sacrifice, and drink-offering, every thing upon his day: beside the sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill offerings, which ye give unto the Lord.”—Lev. xxiii. 33—38. Of these three great festivals, those holy convocations, those sacred ordinances of religious worship, Moses speaks,” Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose; in the feast of unleaven bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles.”—Deut. xvi. 16.

Of the many solemnities ordained amongst the seed of Abraham, we shall only particularly mention another, which belongs to, and takes the highest station of sacrificial ordinances. It is the great feast of expiation. “And this shall be a statute for ever unto you: that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger, that sojourneth among you; for on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord. It shall be a sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls by a statute for ever.”—Lev. xvi. 29—31. As a summary of religious ordinances of this character, hear Moses recapitulate, “Unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shall come: and thither ye shall bring your burnt offerings, and your sacrifices, and your tithes, and heave offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your freewill offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and of your flocks.”—Deut. xii. 5, 6. To these solemn ordinances might be added the feast of trumpets—of new moons —of Purim—of the dedication of the temple—but these will suffice to shew that the Jews had the ordinances of a church, which is the second requisite of a church state. I now proceed to exhibit a third requisite of a church which we find the Jews possessed, and this is a very essential one indeed; they had the officers of a church—but my time has expired.

Mr. Campbell thus spoke:

Mr. Maccalla was so condescending as to give us his New Testament authority for infant baptism, or to read us those passages which he thinks refer to infant baptism, although he made no reply to any evidence urged by me from that source. It must be admitted, however, that his remarks on the baptizing of disciples, importing that infants were called disciples, had some reference to my reading the law of baptism from the commission, recorded Matt. xxviii. 18, 19. But is it possible that the sagacious, the learned, the wise, the shrewd Mr. Maccalla affirms that a sucking infant can, with any reference to the correct meaning of words, be called a disciple or a scholar of Christ!—An infant a disciple! It is a contradiction in terms. But did Mr. Maccalla prove that infants were called disciples? No: he asserted it. He said that they were so called in Acts, chap. xv. Did he state the circumstances of the case? Did he allude to the occasion, or refer to the context in which these words appear? No. Were infants mentioned in the chapter? No. A singular way of affording New Testament authority for infant baptism, to allude to a chapter where neither infants nor baptism is mentioned!! His second New Testament reference was to the words of the Saviour, saying, “Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God.” This, though a more usual reference than the former, is just as irrelevant, for two substantial reasons; besides many others. The first is, this was spoken a considerable time before Christian baptism was appointed, consequently could have no reference to it whatever. In the next place, these infants were brought to Christ for one particular purpose, which is specified, consequently, as the Confession of Faith says, “the sense of scripture is not manifold but one,” can have no reference to infant sprinkling. Until those reasons are impugned, or removed, it is superfluous to present others, though we have sundry at hand. His third and last New Testament reference, which is to holy children, unfortunately labours under the same general defectibility. Baptism is not there mentioned, and the holiness there spoken of belongs to those children until they die, notwithstanding they should be unbelievers and incapable of baptism all their lines. Mr. Maccalla's Confession of Faith lops off this text also from the service of Pedobaptists. The sense of scripture, Mr. Maccalla, you believe, is not two, three, or manifold, but one. So, so. All Mr. Maccalla's New Testament accounts of infant baptism never mention the thing directly nor indirectly; and so it comes to pass that he has none. — It is better then, and he hits done wisely, to tell us that a part of the seed of Abraham was divinely constituted a true visible church of God; perhaps he may squeeze some infant subjects out of this.

I complained, in my last address, that Mr. Maccalla read his arguments from his manuscript and neglected to respond to mine, which he is bound to do, according to all established usage; or else to yield the point at issue. But to excuse his constant attention to this little book, which causes him to neglect me, he has told you that I too have got a manuscript. Yes, my friends, here it is; a few hundred references, to the original scriptures, and a few extracts from ecclesiastical history, from authors which I could not bring hither, owing to the stage of the river, and (turning it round to the people) it is chiefly blank, for the purpose of making notes of Mr. Maccalla's arguments. But I am glad of the opportunity now afforded me, of proposing to Mr. Maccalla to give up all his papers and I will give up mine, and let our debate be viva voce as it was proposed.

Mr. Maccalla still goes on to prove a point that I have not denied. He is determined to take his own course; whether his arguments are denied or affirmed. I told him, in the outset, that I admitted the proposition that “apart of the seed of Abraham was divinely constituted a true church of God.” And this is all he contends for in fact, though he would represent it in such a form as that there might appear to be a difference worthy of contention. He has read his proposition in one set of words, and proves it another sense. You will observe that the proposition reads, “Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true, visible church of God.” Yet, he himself declares, that not all his seed belonged to it; for he has excepted Hagar’s son, and Keturah’s six sons, and of Isaac’s seed he has excepted the posterity of Esau. Why, then, in the name of common sense, does he object to my saying a part only, when he, in fact, proves only a part of the seed of Abraham to have been thus constituted? The term church signifies an assembly called out; therefore, that part of Abraham’s seed, in the line of Isaac and Jacob, who were afterwards called out, in the days of Moses, might be called a church of God, because called out by God. The term true attached to this church is to be admitted, or rejected, according to the sense attached to it. If it mean not false, nor feigned, but genuine, we admit it; but if Mr. Maccalla means by it, that the Jews were a church of God similar to, or the same as, the church of Jesus Christ, we reject it. Although we will admit Mr. Maccalla’s first position in the sense defined, we will positively deny his second when he brings it forward. If I should say that a horse was divinely constituted a true visible creature of God, I presume my opponent would not deny it. Again, if I should say that an elephant was divinely constituted a true visible creature of God, I presume he would also admit it; but were I to say therefore, because both a horse and an elephant were divinely constituted true visible creatures of God, a horse and an elephant are one and the same true visible creature in different dispensations or climates. I say, I presume he would deny this conclusion as being illegitimate. Just so he reasons, or will reason. He proves the seed of Abraham to be divinely constituted a true visible church, and then the gentiles who believe in Christ to be a divinely constituted true visible church; and then he will infer that they are one and the same church in different dispensations. This conclusion we will deny for the same reasons that he would deny a horse and an elephant to be one and the same creature.

Having now paid much more respect to his arguments than he has done to mine, I shall, my friends, for the sake of occupying a few minutes advantageously, deliver you a short address on an important fact connected with the reference to the fifteenth of the Acts of Apostles. I shall, perhaps, occupy some part of my time this way, until my opponent either attacks my arguments, or advances something worthy of an attack from me.

The calling of us gentiles to be fellow citizens with the saints, and to be a part of the household of God, was an event unexpected by all the apostles for several years after the day of Pentecost. It is true that the ancient prophets spake of it in the most elevated style. Yes; David's and Isaiah's hallowed lips foretold it. They poured it in such glowing colours, in such enraptured strains, in such extatic perspicuity, that we almost tremble to affirm that it was an event unknown to and unexpected by all the holy twelve. But when we reflect that Messiah's death and resurrection from the dead were events of superlative importance to the whole family of man; and that these events were not only revealed by the spirit of prophecy, in language of purer, of more perspicuous, of more sublime expression than mortals speak, than mortals, filled wish enthusiastic ardour, utter; and that those events, though the subject of Messiah's parables, lectures, and familiar conversation with his pupils of the senior class—with the apostolic school, were not understood by the wisest in that school, but that he banished them from his thoughts by saying, “that be far from thee, Master, it shall not be so done unto thee;”” and that another of his class-mates said, with respect to his resurrection from the dead, “Except I see in his hand the print of the nails, and put my linger to the print of the nails, and my hand to his side, I will not believe.” These considerations somewhat diminish our surprise at finding other subjects of luminous prophecy unknown to the apostles; even alter the enjoyment of clearer visions of Messiah's reign. But perhaps all these reflections would not justify us in affirminng that these events were unknown to the ancient prophets themselves that spake of them, and concealed from the apostles until they became the subject of new spiritual illumination, had not Peter, by the Spirit, said of the ancient prophets, that they searched after the meaning of the oracles which they delivered, and that they did not utter these prophecies for their own benefit, or for the people of their lime, but for those who believe the record that God has given of his Son. See I Pet. i.10—12, which MacKnight thus translates: “Concerning which salvation the prophets inquired accurately, and searched diligently, who have prophesied concerning the grace to be bestowed on you. Searching diligently of what people and what kind of time the spirit of Christ, who was in them did signify, when he testified before the sufferings of Christ, and the glories following these. To them it was revealed, that not concerning themselves, but us they ministered these things; which things have now been reported to you by them who have preached the gospel to yon, with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven.” And of the calling of the gentiles, Paul thus speaks in two epistles, according to the same translator: “The mystery of Christ in other generations was not made known to the sons of men, as it is now revealed to his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the gentiles should be joint heirs, and a joint body and joint partakers of his promise concerning Christ through the gospel,” Eph. iii. 5, 6, and Col. i. 26. “The mystery which was kept hid from the ages and from the generations, but now is made manifest to his saints, to whom God was pleased to make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery concerning the gentiles, which is Christ to you [gentiles] the HOPE OF GLORY.”

These oracles justify the declaration, that the calling of the gentiles to the full fruition of the blessings of the gospel of Christ was an event unknown to, and unexpected by, the prophets of antiquity, as well as by the apostles, until revealed to them by a new revelation of the Spirit.

Peter, to whom the Messiah committed the keys of the kingdom of heaven; those keys for which priests have been so long contending; those keys which Peter took to heaven with him, and left not to a successor; no, not to Rome's haughty pontiff; neither to England's lord archbishops; nor to Scotland's high and dignified sanhedrim of the elders of the land; lords in the state, and nobles in the church. I say, this same Peter, the ambassador of Heaven's eternal throne, having flung wide open to the Jews the door of faith, having, to his own nation, unlocked the gates of righteousness and life on the triumphant Pentecost, was sent for by an angel of the skies, was tutored by visions of sheetsfull of reptiles once unclean, but now sanctified to his use; was commanded by the impulse of the advocate of Messiah's cause, the illuminating Spirit, to open, by the same keys, to the gentiles, the many bolted door of all-victorious faith. To the Centurion's house with speed he hasted, and having heard, from a Roman soldier's lips, the transporting intelligence that the reign of the Prince of life was about to extend over all nations; and having surveyed the all-impatient throng of gentiles once unclean, he gave scope to the overflowings of his enraptured soul in these words: Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted of him!” He opened the door of faith, he proclaimed the glad tidings of righteousness and life through Messiah's death and resurrection. He proved to them that to Messiah all the prophets gave testimony that, “through his name, whosoever believeth on him shall receive remission of sins.”

The Spirit of God, with these words, fell on the whole congregation; they believed, and were baptized. Now the tidings ran; now ten thousand tongues with exstacy pronounced, “Then hath God granted unto the gentiles repentance unto life.” Now the question was, amongst some of the Pharisaic Christians of the Jews, shall we of the circumcision unite in one body with these uncircumcised ones! Nay, verily, let them be first circumcised and keep the law; or else let the door of our communion be locked against them. Some of the stricter sort fell on Peter with furious zeal, saying, why Peter, why did you go in and eat with uncircumcised gentiles? Peter tells the wondrous tale, and by a catachresis “which words too far doth strain,” he throws the blame on God. “What was I,” said he, with the simplicity of a child; “What was I, that I could withstand God!” If he gave them the same gift as he did unto us on Pentecost; if he made no difference betwixt them and us, purifying their hearts by faith, why should I refuse to enter their houses and eat a social meal with them? With these words scarcely could he maintain his reputation for orthodoxy with the Jewish disciples. This would not yet suffice. Many reports were industriously divulged. Many said that some of the apostles taught and commanded the gentiles to be circumcised and keep the law; or else they could not be saved. When Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension with them on this topic, having heard that all the apostles were assembled at Jerusalem, the gentiles sent thither to have this matter at once settled. The apostles and elders, and the whole church of Jewish Christians in the metropolis, met together and talked the matter over. Peter, steady to his purpose, and acquainted better than they all with the first calling of the gentiles, in his usual warmth exclaims, (in the words quoted some time ago by Mr. Maccalla, to show that infants were disciples), “Why,” says he, “tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, (these gentiles which have turned unto God, not young infants) which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear?” But we Jews believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, with all our national advantages, we shall be saved just in the same manner as the gentiles, i.e. by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.”

Their decision respecting these disciples, these infants of my opponent, was, that no yoke, no greater burden than these necessary things, should be laid upon those infants! That ye (infants!) abstain from meats offered unto idols,—and from blood,—and from things strangled,—and from fornication,—from which, if ye, (infants!) keep yourselves, ye will do well. Fare ye well, (infants-)!!

This view of the calling of the gentiles, an event so interesting to us—which we are sure cannot be set aside, at one glance, shows, the absurdity, the perfect absurdity, of Mr. Maccalla's hypothesis. But I shall give place to him to read farther on his Jewish church.

Mr. MACCALLA observed: —

As my opponent has proposed we should give up all our papers and debate viva voce, I will refer the matter to the board of moderators, and have their opinion on this proposal.

Major Roper, the president of the bench, observed, that it was optional with the disputants themselves; that they had no authority to control the parties in such matters; that each disputant might avail himself of all advantages he could derive from his notes; and that they would leave them to act, in this respect, as they pleased.

Mr. Maccalla spoke to this effect: —I feel satisfied with the decision of the bench. My opponent's proposal reminds me of a debate between Eckius and Carolostadius. The former being a more flippant and better practised disputes than the latter, proposed to Carolostadius to give up his notes. Carolostadius objected, and assigned as a reason the circumstance already mentioned. For the same reason, I feel disposed to avail myself of my notes, my opponent may act as he pleases, or say what he pleases about them.

I was about proving when I sat down, that the seed of Abraham possessed the third requisite of a church, viz. the officers of a church.

By the officers of a church, I mean those who rule, and officiate in the worship of a church. Of this sort were the elders of Israel, the Levites, the priests, and prophets of the Israelites.

The elders of Israel were to be men of experience, of wisdom, and gravity. Their constitution into an ecclesiastical court, though first advised by Jethro, was afterwards sanctioned by the God of Israel. The commission given to these elders is recorded, Deut. i. 15—17. “So I took the chief of your tribes, wise men, and known, and made them heads over you, captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes. And I charged your judges at that time, saying, hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's, and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it."

Their appointment to office is recorded, Num. xi. 16, 17. “And the Lord said unto Moses, gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there; and I will take of the spirit that is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it riot thyself alone.” 24, 25, ver., “And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle. And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease.”

the elders of the whole congregation, and the elders of particular cities. The latter had particular or special duties assigned them, both of a religious and civil nature. These can be learned to the best advantage by a reference to particular passages, such as the following: “But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die, and fleeth into one of these cities: then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood that he may die.”—Dent. xix. 11, 12. “If one be found slain in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it, lying in the field, and it he not known who hath slain him: then thy elders and thy judges shall come forth, and they shall measure unto the cities which are round about him that is slain: and it shall be, that the city which is next unto the slain man, even the elders of that city shall take an heifer, which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke; and the elders of that city shall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which is neither eared nor sown, and shall strike off the heifer's neck there in the valley: and the priests the sons of Levi shall come near; for them the Lord thy God hath chosen to minister unto him, and to bless in the name of the Lord; and by their word shall every controversy and every stroke be tried: and all the elders of that city, that are next unto the slain man, shall wash their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley; and they shall answer and say, our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it. Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto thy people Israel's charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them.”—Deut. xxi. 1—8. “And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said, sit ye down here. And they sat down. And he said unto the kinsman, Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelech's: and I thought to advertise thee, saying, buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it besides thee: mid I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it.”—Until iv, 2—4.
These elders existed in every city, as may be seen, Ezra x. 14. “Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until the fierce wrath of our God for this matter be turned from us.”

But the duties of the elders of the congregation are so mingled with the duties of the priests and the Levites, that it will be necessary to take a view of them together. They may be seen in the following passages: “If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between stroke and stroke, being matters of controversy within thy gates: then shalt thou arise, and get thee up into the place which the Lord thy God shall choose; and thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and enquire; and they shall show thee the sentence of judgment; and thou shalt do according to the sentence, which they of that place which the Lord shall choose shall shew thee; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee: according to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do; thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall shew thee, to the right hand, nor to the left. And the man that will do presumptuously, and will not hearken unto the priest that standeth to minister there before the Lord thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die: and thou shalt put away the evil from Israel. And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously.”—Deut. xvii. 8—13. Again, when this institution was corrupted or neglected, we find Jehoshaphat restoring it to its pristine purity. “Moreover, in Jerusalem did Jehoshaphat set of the Levites, and of the priests, and of the chief of the fathers of Israel, for the judgment of the Lord, and for controversies, when they returned to Jerusalem. And he charged them, saying, thus shall ye do in the fear of the Lord, faithfully, and with a perfect heart.”—2 Chr. xix. 8, 9.

With respect to the ordination services and duties of the Levites, we learn the whole compendiously in Num. viii. 5—16. “And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them. And thus shall thou do unto them to cleanse them: sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean. Then let them take a young bullock with his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shall thou take for a sin-offering. 'And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together; and thou shalt bring the Levites before the Lord; and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites; and Aaron shall offer the Levites before the Lord for an offering of the children of Israel, that they may execute the service of the Lord. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks; and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, to make an atonement for the Levites. And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the Lord. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be mine. And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt cleanse them, and offer them for an offering. For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of such as open every womb, even instead of the first born of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me. 24—26. “This is it that belongeth unto the Levites; from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof, and shall serve no more; but shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.”*

The priests were consecrated and ordained of God, not only to teach the people, but also to pray for them, and to offer sacrifices for them. The scriptures showing the duties of the priests are so numerous and familiar, that it is unnecessary to make a selection. Every one that roads the Bible knows that the priests’ lips were to keep knowledge; and the people were to learn the law at his mouth. He was also to bless the congregation of Israel; and sometimes to denounce curses upon them.

With regard to the scribes of Israel, though the term was at first more general, it came at last to describe those who are sometimes called doctors of the law, expounders of scripture, such as Ezra, vii. 6. “This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the Lord God of Israel had given; and the king granted him all his request, according to the hand of the Lord his God upon him.” 10. “For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments.” The scribes, in our Saviour’s time, were the most reputable expounders of the law. “Why then say the scribes, said the disciples, that Elias must first come?”

Thus we see that the Jewish church had regularly ordained officers—Levites, priests, elders, scribes—whose duties embraced every thing necessary to the prosperity of a church. Teaching, ruling, admonishing, exhorting, proving for, and blessing Israel; the church were comprehended under the general and special duties enjoined upon them.

I now proceed to show that the church of Israel not only had the oracles of a church, the ordinances of a church, the officers of a church, but they also had the fourth requisite of a church, the religious worship of a church.

The ordinances of a church comprise, in a great measure, the worship of a church; for the observance of the ordinances of a church is the essential part of the worship of a church. In the ordinances of a church, God meets with the worshippers, and they of course meet with him. Hence we find that God says, “Wheresoever I record my name, there will I meet with you, and there will I bless you.”

But before the peculiar ordinances of worship were commanded Israel, they are said to have worshiped God. They sang his praises when they crossed the Red Sea; and when Moses went up into the Mount, some of them “worshipped afar off.”

David distinguishes certain acts of devotion as peculiarly the worship of God. In these the worship of Israel emphatically consisted. Ps. xcv. 1—6.
They had a book of psalms; they had their courses of singers; they had their musical instruments; they had their social prayers and social praises. They had the reverential attitudes of worship, they had the solemnities of the house of God enjoined upon them. They were severely reprimanded for their departure from this worship, for apostatizing to the worship of the nations around them, as Stephen tells them, Acts vii. 33—43.

The discipline of a church, inseparably connected with its worship, was also established among them. Thus we find certain persons stoned to death, and otherwise cut off by divine authority, for either corrupting the worship, transgressing the commandments, or departing from the ordinances of God.

In the next place, they had the members of a church. Persons professing the worship of the one only living and true God, and their offspring are the constituent members of a church. I need scarcely cite any scripture to prove this point. For who does not know that, in the very worst of times, there was a remnant according to the election of grace; not only of professors, but of possessors of the true religion? Thus saith God, in one of the darkest periods of the Jewish church, “I have reserved unto myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.” But, as this point requires no farther proof, I will proceed to notice the last proof of this proposition, which will be to show that the seed of Abraham was, by the spirit of inspiration, called a church. But my time forbids me now to adduce the proof.

Mr. Campbell then arose: —

As my opponent continues to prove points altogether irrelevant to this proposed discussion, his own confession of faith being judge; and points too not denied by me, at least, in no sense affecting this controversy, I will proceed to address you, my respected auditors, on a point of no small moment, on a subject of great significance, which, if my opponent understood, he would not be found at this time in the ranks of Pedobaptists, and much less in the van of the advocates of infant sprinkling. It is a topic which, when it rises to our view, all these Jewish notions of a political church, a church composed of all born into the world, vanish, as the shadows nursed beneath the brows of the mountains, in the empire of night, disappear before the rays of the morning sun. I will but glance at it, in the mean time, for the purpose of preparing your minds for a more circumstantial attention to it in some future period of this discussion.

It is the reign of Messiah the Prince, as appearing, as dawning upon the astonished eyes of Jewish prophets, through the long vista of many centuries. It is the development, the gradual development, of that glorious kingdom which many prophets and righteous men, members of the church of Moses, desired to see, but did not see. Its very intimation to the Jews exposed the penury and meanness of their church state, and raised to the skies the expectations of the glorious felicities of Messiah's realm.

It pleased the Governor of the nations to give the king of Babylon a representation, in a vision of the night, of the mighty empires which should in succession rise; each upon the ruins of its predecessor. The image he had of these empires, these great heads of imperial power, none of the wise men, none of the religious men, none of the scientific men in Nebuchadnezzar's court could unfold. Daniel alone, a prophet of the God of Israel, by the visions of the Almighty, by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, could unfold it, could explain the significant emblems. It reads thus: “Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass; his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that was of iron and clay, and brake it to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king. Thou, O king, art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over all. Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken. And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay. And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter; and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.” Dan. ii. 31—45. Observe, my friends, that this prediction and representation were given while the Jewish church was in existence, in actual existence, several hundred years before the scepter departed from Judah; before “the kingdom of priests,” “the holy nation,” (inspired names of the church of Moses) I say, before this church came to a close the prediction of ANOTHER was given. Before the holy nation the kingdom of priests passed away, Messiah's kingdom in prospective dawns. The Babylonish or Chaldean empire then existed; this was, Daniel said, the golden kingdom—this yielded to the Persian, or the silver kingdom. The Persian yielded to the Grecian, or the brazen kingdom. The Grecian yielded to the Roman, or the iron kingdom. The golden, the silver, the brazen, and the iron kingdoms were all seen by the kingdom of priests, the holy nation. But, saith the prophet, in the days of the iron kingdom, shall the God of heaven SET up a kingdom. Not the golden, the silver, the brazen, the iron, nor the sacerdotal— the holy kingdom, for these had all been SET UP long ago.
Had denotes the time past; shall, the time future, God had, by his special agency, set up the holy typical kingdom; he had, by his providence, set up the golden, the brazen, and the iron kingdoms. Human agency, by his permission, set up these. But in the days of the Caesars, said the prophet, he will set up a new kingdom—an everlasting, an all-conquering kingdom, that shall never yield. How apropos the emblem! a little stone, cut out of the other kingdoms, the kingdoms of the world, without hands. This little stone is put into motion by the God of heaven. It moves, it rolls, it grows, it magnifies, it strengthens, it becomes irresistible, it subdues, it destroys, it consumes all opposition; it becomes a mountain, an exceeding great mountain, it fills the whole earth.

The term basileia in Greek, and regnum in Latin, signifies either the reign of a prince, or the people over whom he reigns. The regnum of Great Britain signifies the kingdom of Great Britain. The regnum of king George signifies the reign of king George. The Greeks and Romans used one word, for which we use two. Hence the best translators of the New Testament, amongst whom are Drs. Campbell and MacKnight, translated the term basileia both reign and kingdom, according to the context. When basileia implies approximation, Campbell, in the four gospels, translates it reign; assigning as a most conclusive reason, that the reign of a king may be nearer or more remote, but the kingdom is always local, in one place. Thus, where the phrase the kingdom of heaven or of God is nigh, occurs in the New Testament, he translates it the reign of God, or of heaven approaches. Thy kingdom come, thy reign come: you shall see the kingdom of God, you shall see the reign of God; the kingdom of God is come unto you, the reign of God is come unto you; and so on uniformly reign or kingdom, according to the context, and according to the reason assigned.

The kingdom of Messiah transcends the golden, the silver, the brazen, the iron, and the sacerdotal or Jewish kingdom, in glory and excellence; as far as the excellence and glory of Messiah the Prince excels all the kings of the earth, as far as Emmanuel excels Moses, as far as the blaze at noon excels the twinkling of a star.

None of the ancient prophets saw this reign commence. They wished to see it, but they could not. Its glory charmed their eyes, and ravished their hearts. The New Testament opens with the annunciation of its near approach. John, the dipper, began to proclaim, in the deserts of Judea, that men should reform, for the reign of God was at hand or nigh. The Messiah began to preach its approximation; he sent the chosen twelve and the select seventy to announce to every village in the Holy Land that it was approaching. John the Baptist, however, died without seeing it come. Like Moses who came near the borders of Canaan, and described it to the ransomed Jews, but entered not into it himself; so John, the second Elias, pointed to the Lamb of God, hailed the approach of his reign, informed his countrymen of it, but he was beheaded before Messiah the king was crowned. Well spake John, “he must increase, but I must decrease.”

John not only preached its near approach, but he baptized into the faith of Him that was to come. Jesus not only proclaimed that it was nigh, but taught his disciples to pray “THY REIGN COME.” Many through ignorance or unbelief still pray “thy reign come,” not knowing that this petition is out of season. It was for a limited time, as was the preaching and baptism of John. Christ did not teach them in this prayer to make use of his name as an intercessor; but before his death he taught them, saying, “Hitherto ye have asked for nothing in my name, ask and it shall be given you, whatsoever ye ask in my name.” But, lo! Jesus himself the king dies before his reign commences. Yes, the Captain of salvation must be perfected and raised to glory through sufferings; before Pontius Pilate he witnessed a good confession concerning his reign. The testimony of this King of martyrs was, “My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, my subjects would have fought (as they did under Moses) that I should not have been delivered.” But tell Caesar, I am no rival prince of his; yes, tell him, Pontius Pilate, that none are claimed by me, as subjects of my reign, but such as hear, believe, and obey my voice. “Everyone that is of the truth heareth my voice.”

The King, after he rose from the dead, and was perfected to reign over his ransomed subjects, because he had been made like unto them in life, in temptation, in affliction, in corporeal weakness, in privation, and sorrow; had tasted death in its bitterest form ever presented to any of the human race, and had been a tenant of the house appointed for all the living; I say, after he arose from the dead, he frequently appeared unto his disciples, and during his various interviews discoursed with them concerning his kingdom.

That kingdom and that glorious reign of which they had heard him so often speak, that kingdom and reign which had been likened to so many things on earth in parables and comparisons; the inspired eleven did not yet understand. The scribes and the elders, the clergy and the Jewish church, had, like their children in modern times, so often extolled the excellence of the Mosaic church, the church of God constituted at Sinai, the church of which my opponent has the most inadequate ideas; that the Jews never could admit the idea of anything else but the continuance of the same church, under a form of additional glory. They interpreted all the prophecies of the Old Testament; and the eleven understood all the discourses of Christ in the New, as my opponent understands them, as referring to a continuation of the same worldly church, worldly sanctuary, and carnal ordinances; but with some change of dispensation. The prejudices of education, and the influence of the Jewish clergy had beclouded their understanding, had benumbed their feelings, and spread a veil over the face of Moses and the prophets, insomuch that the eleven, with all their cotemporaries, could not look to the consummation and abolition of that church state. Thus, after the forty days tuition of the risen Messiah, when about to ascend into heaven, they asked him a question which exposed their ignorance of his kingdom, “Lord wilt thou at this time restore the reign to Israel!” “Go,” said he, “tarry in Jerusalem,” say not a word about this reign, for ye are not accomplished for the work until ye receive power from on high.

How fully does this illustrate Messiah’s discourse with Nicodemus, “Except a man be born again, he cannot see or understand the reign of God, and except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.” The day of Pentecost is therefore called the regeneration, “Verily I say unto you, ye which have followed me, shall, in the regeneration, when Messiah shall be placed on his glorious throne, and crowned Lord of all, ye also shall be placed on twelve thrones, judging, pronouncing statutes and judgments to, the twelve tribes of Israel.
Matthias now filled the place of him who by transgression fell from the apostolic office. Now they are about ascending the apostolic thrones. Now the day of Pentecost is fully come. Now Messiah has ascended up far above all heavens. Now he is exalted a Prince and a Saviour to send the regenerating Spirit, and to give repentance unto Israel. When entering the portals of the highest heaven, his attendant angels say, “Lift up your heads, O ye gates: be lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in! Angels and the spirits of the just around heaven's eternal throne exclaim, “Who is the King of glory?”—Messiah's attendant angels respond, “The Lord (Messiah) strong and mighty: the Lord mighty in battle.” Messiah who vanquished sin, death, hades, and the devil by his victorious arm. All in heaven with one voice exclaim, “Lift up your heads, O ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in.” The everlasting doors fly open. The echo of the attendant angels without, and the re-echoes of angels and the spirits of patriarchs and Jews, Abel, Enoch, Abraham, Moses, Elias, and myriads unknown to mortals here below, repeat, “Who it the King of glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory. Selah.”—Psalm xxiv. 7—10. Amidst encircling echoes and arching triumphs Messiah enters the everlasting gates. His Father and his God in awful majesty addresses him, saying, “Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The Lord shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. Thy people, the people whom thou hast purchased, shall be willing in the day of thy power, that power which thou shall send from on high. In the beauties of holiness, more than the womb of the morning, thou shalt have the dew of thy youth. Jehovah hath sworn, and will never regret. Thou art a priest for ever—a priest upon thy throne after the order of Melchizedeck.”—Psalm ex. 1—4. “Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the scepter of thy kingdom is a right scepter. Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.” Thus was Messiah crowned. Then saith Messiah's Father, “Why do the heathen tumultuously assemble, and the people meditate a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against Jehovah and against his Messiah, saying, let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their restraints from us. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and trouble them in his sore displeasure. Yet have I crowned my king upon Zion the hill of my holiness.”—Yes, saith Messiah, “I will publish to the nations thy appointment, the decree of my investiture, that the Lord hath authoritatively pronounced. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.” “Ask of me,” saith the Father, “and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thine enemies thou shalt break with a rod of iron, thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.”—Psalm ii. 1—9.

Such was the attendant circumstances of the exaltation of our victorious King, Therefore on the day of the regeneration, when the noise as of a mighty rushing wind was heard, blowing where it listed, no one in Jerusalem able to tell whence it came, nor whither it went, Peter declared that this power from on high came from Messiah—“Therefore, said he, “being by the right, hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear. Let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both the anointed King and Governor of all.” Having opened the reign of God to the Jews, three thousand were born of water and of the Spirit on that self-same day, and thus entered into the new kingdom; as volunteers put themselves under the reign of Messiah the Prince and Saviour.

In the days of the Caesars, then, the God of heaven SET UP or constituted this new reign, this new kingdom, of which Daniel spake. Hence, the kingdom that required regeneration of the Spirit and of the water did not commence till this day. The king being crowned, his reign necessarily commenced. These few hints, my friends, will prepare your minds for the demolition of the Pedobaptist views of the kingdom of God when my opponent shall have brought his argument to a close.

Mr. MacCalla thus spake: — Mr. Campbell has given you scraps of sermons which he has committed to memory; and thus endeavours to entertain you by exhibiting his skill in interpreting scripture. His interpretations, however, appear more ingenious than solid, more flippant and light than substantial. Many of them indeed are altogether novel, and not only novel, but contrary to the generally received sense of scripture, by most divines of solid learning and real piety. I am not going to follow him in the warm flights of his imagination, in the fervid meanderings of his fancy from Genesis to Revelation. Solid argument and conclusive reasoning is all that I aim at. I choose rather to follow in the beaten path of the wise, the learned, and the pious that have gone before me, than to follow him in his extravagant excursions in the trackless paths of a vivid imagination. I aim not at originality of thought, nor even of argument. I move on slowly in the frequented paths of sober reason and common sense. It is not my fault if I do not possess the most brilliant parts, but it is my fault if I do not apply my faculties to proper objects in a proper course.

Mr. Campbell has eulogized Campbell and MacKnight as translators, more than once to-day. Because, I presume, they favour him, in his fanciful interpretation of scripture, more than the common translation of the scriptures. I cannot agree with him in his encomiums on these men. They were men too similar to himself. They treated the scripture too lightly, and did not treat men of superior standing with becoming respect. I venerate them not. The one, I consider, was an hypocrite, and the other an unbeliever. They were men of talent and erudition, but they lacked, what was of much greater value, true piety.

But I was, when I last sat down, commencing the last item in proof of my first position, which was to show, that not only did the seed of Abraham possess the necessary requisites of a church state, but they had been actually called a church; they had received by the spirit of inspiration the very name church. They are called the church of the Lord, of Jehovah, both in the Old Testament and the New. Let us now attend to the application of this name to the seed of Abraham. It first occurs in the book of Deuteronomy. I mean the word ekklesia which is the word used by the writers of the New Testament, and which is usually translated church.
Deut. ix. 10. “And the Lord delivered unto me two tables of stone, written with the finger of God; and in them was written according to all the words which the Lord spake unto you in the mount in the day of the assembly,” or, in the day of the church. In the Septuagint Greek it reads, “hemera ekklesias”—in the day of the church. The authority of the style of the Septuagint is rendered unquestionable, from the circumstance of its being the style of the New Testament, and from its having been most frequently cited, in the very words of the text, by our Lord and his apostles. It was generally read in all the synagogues of the Hellenistic Jews, before and at the Christian era; and was, consequently, of high reputation among the Jews who were very much attached, even to a superstitious degree, to the letter of the Old Testament.

Again, Deut. xviii. 16. “The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, unto him ye shall hearken; according to all that thou desiredst of the Lord thy God in Horeb in the day of the assembly.” Here the words are the same as in the ix. 10. of the same book—“te hemera tes ekklesias.” In the day of the church.—In both these passages the writer has the same event in view. He refers in both, to the day in which all Israel was assembled at the base of mount Sinai in Arabia; the day in which the first written oracles of God were committed unto the Jews. On this occasion, then, they received, by the Jewish prophet Moses, the inspired name of the church.

The term ekklesia occurs in Judges xxi. 5, and is there rendered congregation, and in the eighth verse of the same chapter it is rendered assembly. Verse fifth. “And the children of Israel said, Who is there among all the tribes of Israel that come not up with the congregation unto the Lord? for they had made a great oath concerning him that came not up to the Lord lo Mizpeh, saying, He shall surely be put to death.” Verse eighth, “And they said, What one is there of the tribes of Israel that came not up to Mizpeh to the Lord? And, behold, there came none lo the camp from Jabesh-gilead to the assembly.” In the fifth verse it is en te ekklesia, and in the eighth it is eis ten ekklesian.

Joshua viii. 35. It occurs again, “There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them;” here it is pases ekklesias, all the church, or all the congregation. The phrase pase ekklesia occurs 1 Sam xvii. 47. “And all this assembly shall know that the Lord saveth not with sword and spear: for the battle is the Lord’s, and he will give you into our hands.”

Ekklesia occurs three times in 2 Chro. xxix. 28—32.” And all the congregation (ekklesia) worshiped, and the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all tin’s continued until the burnt offering was finished. And when they had made an end of offering, the king and all that were present with him bowed themselves, and worshiped. Moreover Hezekiah the king and the princes commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the Lord with the words of David, and of Asaph the seer. And they sang praises with gladness, and they bowed their heads and worshiped. Then Hezekiah answered and said, Now ye have consecrated yourselves unto the Lord, come near and bring sacrifices and thank offerings into the house of the Lord. And the congregation brought in sacrifices and thank offerings: and as many as were of a free heart burnt offerings. And the number of the burnt offerings, which the congregation brought, was three score and ten bullocks, an hundred rams, and two hundred lambs: all these were for a burnt offering to the Lord.”

Nehemiah xiii. 1, 2, saith, using the same word, “On that day they read the book of Moses in the audience of the people; and therein was found written, that the Amnonite and the Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever; because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them; howbeit our God turned the curse into a blessing.”

In the book of Psalms it frequently occurs—Ps. xxii. 22, 25. xxvi. 5, 12. xxxv. 18. xl. 9. lxviii. 26. lxxxix. 5. cvii. 32.

In the New Testament some of those passages read from the Old are quoted; as that from Deuteronomy ix. 10. or xviii. 16. is cited by Stephen, Acts vii. 38, 39. “This is that Moses, which said unto the children of Israel, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear. This is he that was in the church in the wilderness, with the angel that spake unto him in the Mount Sinai, and with our fathers; who received the lively oracles to give unto us.” Here the ekklesia, translated assembly, in Deuteronomy is rendered church, which shows that the words assembly and church were supposed to be equally expressive of the meaning of the original. And indeed the word synagogue, rendered congregation and synagogue, is also applied to the same assembly in many passages in the Old Testament, such as Ps. xl. 9, 10. “I have preached righteousness in the great congregation: lo, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord, thou knowest. I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation; I have not concealed thy lovingkindness and thy truth from the great congregation.” Here the same congregation is called ekklesia and synagogue. In Ps. cxi. 1. Boule and synagogue are applied to the same congregation, and in Ps. viii. 9. v. 7. Boule and ekklesia are applied to the same assembly; and, indeed, the word synagogue is applied in very many passages to the same congregation which is called he ekklesia the church.

In Hebrews ii. 12. Paul cites Ps. xxii. 22, and our translators render the word ekklesia in the Hebrews, church, and in the Psalms, congregation. —Thus Paul says, quoting the words of Christ, “I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praises to thee.” — And David speaking of the same person, Ps. xxii. 22. saith, “I will declare thy name unto my brethren. In the midst of the congregation will I praise thee.” The original Greek is the same in both. Thus I have shown that the seed of Abraham in the Old and New Testament, in their associate state, are called a church, the church of the Lord. Now here Mr. Campbell remarks ‘in his debate with Mr. Walker, p. 40, 41,’ Stephen uses the phrase, ’the church in the wilderness ’—Here the whole stress of his proof rests upon the word ’*church, ’ without any epithet to qualify or explain its acceptation. Now I will cheerfully admit the testimony of Stephen, in all its force; and I will call the congregation of Israel in the wilderness, a church: but will this prove that this congregation was a church of Christ? Mr. Walker, I presume, understands the word church, without an epithet, to mean neither more nor less than 'an assembly' —I presume he will also confess, that a mob is once called a church in the New Testament. If he does not, I am ready to prove it—Acts sixth, we read of Demetrius, the silversmith, and the mob which he raised against the apostle and his companions: the whole town was in an uproar; the town clerk appeased this mob by an oration he delivered them, telling them that in a lawful church, (ekklesia, the same word used Acts vii. 38, the “ekklesia” in the wilderness) their cause would be tried—and verse 41, when he had thus spoken, (apeluse ten ekklesian) he dismissed the assembly or church. In this chapter, the word is applied to a mob, or an unlawful assembly, and it is also applied to a court, or lawful assembly, met to hear and judge causes. Thus the word ekklesia, or church, was used by the holy penmen of the New Testament, to denote any sort of an assembly. Like the word synagogue, the epithet made it either an assembly of Jews or a “synagogue of Satan;” this criticism, I am confident, neither my opponent nor any man acquainted with Greek, will deny. Hence it follows, that this quotation from the 7th of the Acts, proves nothing favourable to his views, inasmuch as it means no more than an assembly or congregation in the wilderness, without any respect to the character of it. It was an assembly or church of Jews, and not an assembly of Christians or a church of Jesus Christ.”

"Seeing I am on the word ekklesia, ' I may further observe, that as this word is composed of two Greek words, ek, out of, and kaleo, to call, the word ekklesia signifies 'the called out.' The Jews in the wilderness were 'called out' by Moses the messenger of God—the mob of Ephesus was 'called out' by Demetrius; and the lawful assembly of which the town clerk spoke, was an assembly 'called out' by those in authority—the church of Jesus Christ is an assembly 'called out' of the world by his grace, or separated from the world by his word and Spirit—hence, says Christ, 'ye are not of the world, I have chosen you out of the world.' Consequently, no nation, as such, ever was the church of Jesus Christ.”

So then the church of God in the wilderness is called an assembly only, without respect to its character, and Mr. Campbell will have it, or leave others to make it, a mob or a synagogue of Satan; for if it was not the church of God, it must have been a mob, or a synagogue of Satan. But I have proved that this assembly, this church in the wilderness, was divinely constituted a true visible church of God, from the fact of its having possessed

1. The oracles of a church,
2. The ordinances of a church,
3. The officers of a church,
4. The members of a church,
5. The worship and discipline of a church,
6. And because it had the inspired name of a church, consequently no mob, no synagogue of Satan.

To-morrow, my friends, I will prove that the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are ONE and the SAME church in different dispensations.

Mr. Maccalla ceased, and a motion was made to adjourn.

[Here Mr. Campbell begged leave to remark, that as his opponent, in the conclusion of his address, had endeavoured to make a very uncandid and a very incorrect impression on the mind of the congregation respecting the quotation read from the Debate at Mount Pleasant, as if he had either said or insinuated, that the church in the wilderness was a mob, or a synagogue of Satan. Mr. Campbell said that it is not fact, that he either said or insinuated any such thing. He had merely, said that the term ekklesia denoted an assembly of any kind, and that it was the epithets or circumstances attached to it that gave it a definite meaning. The congregation before us in this camp is not a church of Jesus Christ. According to my opponent, observed Mr. Campbell, it must be either a mob or a synagogue of Satan! He was sorry that he was compelled to correct so gross a misrepresentation.]

So stood the discussion at the close of the first day. It was adjourned till 11 o'clock next day.

Met in the same place on the 16th, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Mr. Campbell thus began: —

My friends and brethren; —Mr. Maccalla occupied your attention yesterday, in proving one position, which we did not controvert. This was done, as he said, for securing his future conclusions from assault. These impregnable fortresses in his rear, which he has been engaged in erecting, will appear in the detail, as either useless or worse than useless. The position to be proved to-day we boldly deny. And who) he shall have proved it, in his way, we pledge ourselves to present facts and documents subversive of it, and irrefragable by Mr. Maccalla. In the mean time we shall make a few remarks on the word ekklesia, the design of which will be to show, that in the New Testament it is appropriated to represent an assembly, essentially distinct from that which it represented in the Old.
Many words have an appropriated and an unappropriated meaning. This we shall illustrate by a few plain instances. The word congress, in its common or unappropriated meaning, signifies any kind of meeting together. Such as the congress of streams, of lakes, of seas, of roads, of people. This no scholar will deny.
This term, like the lands of the country, was once unappropriated; it denoted any kind of meeting' of fluids or solids, of things animate or inanimate, of things rational or irrational. But a few years since it was appropriated, as some of our lands are, for a certain purpose; to denote the great national legislative meeting of the United States. Now the term “the congress,” in every one's mouth, denotes this great national legislature. Who would say that there is any ambiguity resting on the present popular use of the term, or that it signified the same thing in every English book one hundred years ago, that it now signifies in the United States? The same may be observed of the terms synod, assembly, association, convention. They all have their appropriated meanings, in the mouths of those who have selected them, as terms of designation of certain bodies, religious or political.

But, to come nearer to the term in dispute, I will select a few kindred terms from the Old Testament, which have been appropriated in the New, to represent something essentially different from their common or unappropriated signification.
A few of note will suffice. We shall begin with the word episcopos, literally signifying overseer, sometimes translated bishop. This word, in its unappropriated meaning, signifies any kind of an overseer or bishop. Thus, in the Old Testament it is used, Num. xxxi. 14, to denote the captains of the Jewish army, called bishops of the host. Judges; x. 28, Zebul, a military officer, is called a bishop. It is used in the same sense, 2 Kings xi. 15
Three times in the Old Testament military officers are called bishops.

Those who superintended the repairs of the temple, 2 Chro, xxxiv. 12—17, are called bishops of artificers. Those who had the management of the temple, keeping it safe and in order, are called “bishops of the Lord's house.” Those whom Nehemiah placed over the city are called, chap. xi. 9, bishops of the city. Eleazar, the son of Aaron, is called bishop, from overseeing the tabernacle and its furniture. — Num. iii. 32.

In all these passages, and in some others, the word episkopos occurs in the Septuagint, which is the word rendered bishop in the New Testament. It is plain from the instances given, that the term bishop, in its unappropriated sense, applies to any kind of overseer. Now, in the New Testament, it is appropriated to denote the overseer of a church. One that teaches, and rules, or keeps order in the church of Christ, who is himself the only Archbishop of souls. As well, then, might Mr. Maccalla affirm, that because captains of thousands, chief artificers, and superintendants of cities, are called bishops, therefore the bishops of the Christian church are to be captains of thousands, &c. because they have the same “inspired name!!!”

Of the same kind of unappropriated terms in the Old Testament are presbuteros, and diakonos. The one translated an elder, the other a deacon, minister, or servant. Each of these terms, in their unappropriated sense, are applied in the Old Testament, to officers very different from those designated by them, in their appropriated sense, in the New. This we are assured our opponent will not deny. Now the term ekklesia, in its unappropriated sense, in both Testaments, signifies any kind of an assembly; but, in its appropriated sense, it signifies a society of disciples of Christ meeting in one place. But to bring forward an authority which Mr. Maccalla, we presume, will not contradict, asserting the same things in substance, with those we have asserted, we will cite Dr. John Mason. As he is a violent Pedobaptist, his concessions on this topic are the more worthy of regard. See his Essay on the Church of God, p. 8, 9. “The Hebrew words (cahal) and (gheda) in the Old Testament, and the corresponding one (ecclesia) in the New, all signify an assembly, especially one convened by invitation or appointment. That this is the generic sense, no scholar will deny; nor that their particular applications are ultimately resolvable into it. Hence it is evident, that from the terms themselves, nothing can be concluded as to the nature or extent of the assembly which they denote. Whenever either of the two former occurs in the Old Testament, or the other in the New, you are sure of an assembly, but of nothing more. What that assembly is, and whom it comprehends, you must learn from the connexion of the term, and the subject of the writer. A few instances will exemplify the remark. In the Old Testament (cahal) is applied to the whole mass of the people. Ex. xii. 6. To a portion of the people, who came upon Hezekiah's invitation to keep the passover. 2 Chron. xxx. 24, To the army of Pharaoh. Ezek. xvii. 17. To an indefinite multitude. Gen. xxviii. 3. To the society of Simeon and Levi. xlix. 6. So also (gheda) is applied to the whole nation of Israel. Ex. xvi. 22; xxxv. 1. To the particular company of Koran, Dathan, and Abiram. Num. xvi. 16. To the assembly of the just, as opposed to the wicked. Ps. i. 5. To the judicatory, before which crimes were tried. Num. xxxv. 12. 24; compared with Dent. xix. 12, 17, 18. In like manner (ecclesia) rendered “church,” is applied to the whole body of the redeemed. Ephs. v. 24, 27. To the whole body of professing Christians. 1 Cor. xii. 28. To local organizations of professing Christians, whether more or less extensive; as in the apostolic salutations and inscriptions of the epistles. To a small association of Christians meeting together in a private house. Col. iv. 15; Phil. i. 2. To a civil assembly lawfully convened. Acts xix. 39. To a body of people irregularly convened. Acts xix. 32. This specimen is sufficient to show that no person can answer the question “what is the church?” without carefully examining the thing as well as the name.” This is just what we have always contended for on this topic, and this is what every scholar must admit, which way soever his prejudices run. This being granted, my opponent's labour yesterday, and the toils of to-day, may ruin his cause, but it is impossible that they can advantage it. All that he, or Dr. Mason, or any other Pedobaptist can prove, the above being granted, concerning the Jews, is, that they were from the day of their constitution in the wilderness at Mount Sinai a church of God in some sense, but not in the Christian sense of the term. This we hope to prove in this discussion against all opposition.

In the mean time, however, we must redeem the pledge we have given to the public, let my opponent pursue what course he may. From this we shall not be diverted. We stand pledged to prove first, that infant sprinkling is a human tradition. This, we have already said, requires us to do two things; first, to prove that believers only are the legitimate subjects of baptism. In the next place, that immersion is the only baptism. These are both affirmative propositions, and require, in a regular debate, to be oppugned by my opponent. But this he appears determined not to attempt. He has his own affirmative propositions to prove, which I am not bound to oppugn, according to our agreement. I was pledged to affirm and he to deny. He, notwithstanding, affirms, and leaves me without an opponent in strict propriety. On his plan of managing this discussion, I could make a boy of sixteen dispute with the lord Archbishop of Canterbury. I would tell him to collect as much matter as would require many days reading; and to have it rendered so familiar, that he could read it very fluently, looking off now and then, and making a few extempore remarks. I would charge him never formally to attempt to reply to his lordship, but when his lordship had done speaking, to go on and read another half hour, and if his lordship should attack and discomfit his arguments, never to appear to feel it; never to attempt to defend his positions, but to pursue his notes; taking care, however, in the course of his reading, to say any thing that might occur to his mind as very pert; in the mean time, never venturing to lose sight of his manuscript. In this way his lordship might become wearied, and might not be able to speak so many days as he could read; and if he should only succeed in continuing longer than his opponent, the majority would think he had the best of the argument; and if he only held on to the end, many would still say that he had the best of the argument; at all events, all would say, if his lordship should excel, that he had his hands full, and had little to boast of.

I have, in the proof of my first proposition, according to my text, in Mr, Maccalla's Confession of Faith, which saith, that baptism is an ordinance of the New Testament ordained by Jesus Christ,” submitted from the New Testament, first the law of Christian baptism; and secondly, the execution of this law by the apostles. On these two points I design to be more particular than in my first reference to them.

The law of Christian baptism as expressed in the commission, is, baptize the disciples, or the believers of the gospel. It thus reads, “Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name,” &c. Now matheteusate, the word here rendered teach, is conceded by all intelligent Pedobaptists to signify, make disciples or disciple. This is, unquestionably, the proper rendering of the term matheteusate. The verb matheteuo, when governing an accusative, Parkhurst, the Pedobaptist lexicographer says, signifies “to make a disciple,” p. 412. It is not the nations, indiscriminately, that were commanded to be baptized; for ta ethna, [the nations, ] being neuter, is not the antecedent to autous, which is masculine, and which is the accusative governed by matheteusate. Its antecedent is mathetas, in the verb matheteusate.

Again: the phrase “teaching them to observe all things which I have commanded you,” respects the disciples exclusively. For Christ did never command nations, indiscriminately, to observe his ordinances; but only his disciples. He commanded all nations to repent and believe the gospel, and then, as his disciples, he commanded them to keep his commandments. Hence the word rendered teach, in the 20th verse of Matt, xxviii. is not the same as the word rendered teach, in the 19th verse. It is didaskontes, a word importing the office of a preceptor to those who had been put under his tuition. It is expressive of that tuition which teachers owe to their disciples or pupils. Two things, or two classes of duties, were enjoined on the apostles in this commission. The first was the work of discipling or making disciples; the second was the education of those disciples, collected into churches or schools. Now, inasmuch, as the apostles were authorized by the law of Christ to baptize disciples only, this law, in fact, amounts to a prohibition of the baptism of those who are not disciples. This I cannot now illustrate better than by a reference to the Appendix of Debate with Mr. Walker, to which Mr. Maccalla so often refers, p. 209. “A limited commission implies a prohibition of such things as are not contained in it; and positive laws imply their negative. The commission under which the apostles acted was limited, as every Christian will confess. The duties of those who act under it are pointed out; and indeed every creature must act under a limited commission, for the very term itself imports something committed from a superior, or from the supreme.

“The items contained in any commission, are all the things which the commissioned are authorized to perform. If this were not the case, a formal commission is quite an unmeaning thing. Hence, the commission of a magistrate points out, and circumscribes the duties of his office; if this were not the case, he might attend to the duties of the sheriff, the alderman, or the legislator. Now his commission prohibits him from practising as a legislator, and authorizes him to act as a justice of the peace. In like manner the commission to baptize believers or disciples prohibits the baptism of others: yes, it forbids infant baptism as plainly as “thou shalt not steal” implies thou must be honest, or as “I have appointed the sons of Levi to minister in the service of the tabernacle” prohibits the sons of Benjamin or any other tribe from ministering in those things. Unless Peso-baptists can shew a new commission from heaven, and confirm it by miracles authorizing them to baptize infants, they should candidly give up their cause, for this argument completely overthrows it; and if there was not a second argument in the world against their cause, in this respect, all their genius, learning, and talents combined, are unable to remove it.”

That “a believer or a disciple, is the only subject of baptism” is proved from the law of baptism, which authorizes the baptism of such only, and virtually prohibits the baptism of such as are not the professing disciples of Christ. This is our first argument submitted yesterday to be impugned by Mr. Maccalla. It is now illustrated and enforced by the above criticisms and remarks, and if not impugned by Mr. Maccalla, we shall consider it unanswerable.

My second argument in support of this position is, that the apostles who received this commission and law of baptism, must have understood it perfectly, and that they, neither in Judea, Samaria, nor to the uttermost parts of the earth, ever baptized any but the professed disciples of Christ. I need not again read over those scriptures, as my opponent did not oppugn this argument when presented. I shall merely illustrate and enforce it by a remark or two. In the first place, we are positively told, in so many words, that all baptized on the day of Pentecost, first gladly received the word preached, i.e. believed the gospel, before they were baptized. We are positively told that “when the Samaritans believed Philip preaching the gospel, they were baptized both men and women.” We are also informed, that Philip refused to baptize the eunuch until he professed faith. We are moreover informed, in the most positive language, that the first gentile congregation all believed before they were baptized, and, that many of the Corinthians, “hearing, believed, and were baptized.”

Now, being so formally, so minutely, so circumstantially informed of the apostolic practice in so many places, it was not necessary to tell us, in every instance, that every individual first heard, then believed, and lastly was baptized. This would have been altogether unnecessary. For illustration, the laws of our country require that no man be put to death, or deprived of his liberty, unless he has been regularly convicted according to law; that is, there must be a jury, a judge, witnesses, &c. Now we are not always informed, when we read of a person being hung, or sent to the penitentiary, that he was tried in a court legally established; that there was a jury regularly sworn into office, sitting upon the bench; that there was a jury of twelve men, lawfully empanelled; that witnesses were sworn in open court; that the jury brought in a verdict of guilty; and that the judge pronounced the sentence, &c., &c. Yet we know, as soon as we hear that a man was hung, or sent to the penitentiary, that all these things must have first existed, because the law so requires. In like manner, when we read of any person being baptized, after we understand the law and the practice of the apostles, we are sure that he first professed the faith, that there was water, and an administrator present. And why? because the law required it.

In the next place, on this topic, when the historian Luke was so very minute in detailing all the circumstances of the baptized, such as their sex and condition of life, in no one place does he mention the baptism of infants. He mentions men and women, and when he speaks more summarily of households, such circumstances are stated, as preclude the supposition of any infants being included. From these premises we deduce our second argument, which is, that the apostles baptized believers or professed disciples only.

Our third argument is deduced from the design or import of baptism. On this topic of argument we shall be as fully as possible, because of its great importance, and because, perhaps, neither Baptists nor Pedobaptists sufficiently appreciate it. I will first merely refer to the oracles of God, which shew that baptism is an ordinance of the greatest importance, and of momentous significance. Never was there an ordinance of so great import or design. It is to be but once administered. We are to pray often, praise often, show forth the Lord's death often, commemorate his resurrection every week, but we are to be baptized but once. Its great significance may be seen from the following testimonies: — The Lord saith, “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.” He does not say, he that believeth, and keeps my commands, shall be saved; but he saith “he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.” He placeth baptism on the right hand of faith. Again, he tells Nicodemus, that “except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.” Peter, on the day of Pentecost, places baptism in the same exalted place: “Repent,” says he, “and be baptized every one of you, for the remission of sin” Ananias saith to Paul, “Arise, and be baptized, and wash away your sins, calling upon the name of the Lord.” Paul saith of the Corinthians, “Ye were once fornicators, idolaters adulterers, effeminate, thieves, covetous, drunkards, rioters, extortioners, but ye were washed in the name of the Lord Jesus,” doubtless referring to their baptism. He tells Titus, “God our Saviour saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit.” See again its dignified importance! Peter finishes the grand climax, in praise of baptism: “baptism doth also now save us, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.” I have thus, in the naked import of those testimonies, shown that it is of vast import, of glorious design. We shall leave these testimonies, for the present, to speak to your understandings, my friends, resuming them again when Mr. Maccalla shall have addressed you.
Mr. Maccalla rejoined: —

I agree that baptism is an important institution, but I am not going to waste my time, nor my strength, in refuting every thing that may be said about it, inconsistent with scripture and sound reason. I will not labour for nought. To refute all Mr. Campbell may say is not necessary to support the side I have espoused. In saying so much upon the subject, it would be unreasonable to suppose that every thing he may say is erroneous, or that every thing said would deserve a reply. Nor do I wish to derogate from the significance and importance of this rite. Yet this would be no reason why I should elevate it beyond due limits. There is no occasion to exaggerate the import of baptism, for the sake of shewing its importance or design. Nor dare I go so far as my opponent has done, in his late address, in his exaggeration of baptism, as to place it on the right hand of faith, to the exclusion of hope and charity. For the apostle says, there are three important graces, which still abide on earth, and these three are faith, hope, and charity; now the greatest of these is charity. But my opponent would place baptism as superior to hope and charity.

With respect to the passage read from Dr. Mason, I know that the Doctor has said such things as my opponent has read; but in this instance I think the Doctor has gone too far. But I do not like this way of quoting authors. If Mr. Campbell will quote from Dr. Mason in this instance, why not take his word or his criticisms in others? Besides, my opponent would draw other conclusions from these remarks of the Doctor's than are legitimate; for he will draw conclusions from them subversive, intentionally at least, of the subsequent views of the Doctor.

But as my opponent is talking of proving certain points, I will tell you what he has to prove, or else he will fail to do what he has proposed. He must prove,

1. That infant baptism is a human tradition.
2. That any thing short of immersion is not baptism.
3. That sprinkling an infant is injurious to religious and political society.
4. That any thing short of immersion is injurious to the well-being of both church and state.

All these points he must prove, else he fails to redeem his pledge. I have proposed to prove the contrary of these propositions. I have laid down my plan, which you recollect was,

1. To produce a divine command for infant baptism,
2. To afford probable evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.

These points established, and the proper subject of baptism is determined. Our attention, then, will necessarily be called to the mode of baptism; or, in honour of my opponent, perhaps, we will call it the action of baptism.

In producing a divine command for infant baptism, five things I told you yesterday were to be done; —

1. To prove that Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true visible church of God.

2. That the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are ONE and the SAME church in different dispensations. Or, that the Christian church is a BRANCH of the Abrahamic church.

3. That Jewish circumcision before Christ, and Christian baptism after Christ, are ONE and the SAME SEAL, though in different forms.

4. That the administration of this seal to infants was once enjoined by divine authority.

5. That it not having been prohibited by the same authority that ordained it, it consequently remains in full force. These five points established, and a divine command for infant baptism is adduced.

The first of these five points was proved yesterday, viz. that Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true visible church of God. While I was engaged in proving this fundamental position, my opponent was a part of his time delivering patches of old sermons which he had memorized several years ago, which had nothing to do with this position; at least, their bearing upon the point at issue was so faint as not to be very perceivable. For what is it to the truth or falsehood of the position under consideration, to tell us of the calling of the gentiles, the history of the Chaldean, the Persian, the Grecian, and Roman empires; the meaning of a petition of the Lord's prayer; the exaltation of Christ, and many other points which, how true soever, leave the grand question where it was.

He has also read and commented on several passages of the New Testament respecting baptism, particularly the commission to baptize. He has laid great stress upon the word disciples; and upon the phrase “disciple all nations.” I thought it quite sufficient to show that infants were really called disciples, and this being shown, the commission will authorize the baptism of infants. It may be affirmed, with the greatest safety to our cause, that disciples only should be baptized, or that the Lord Jesus Christ commanded none but disciples to be baptized in the commission given to the apostles, provided we can make it appear that the spirit of inspiration has actually called infants disciples, and this appears from the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the apostles, where the apostle Peter asked the question, “why tempt ye God to put a yoke on the neck of the disciples?” i. e. circumcision. Now we know that infants were circumcised at the age of eight clays, consequently, the persons alluded to were actual infants, and these very same infants are called disciples, so that Mr. Campbell's criticism upon the commission being admitted as correct, it will nevertheless follow that infants are to be baptized, being included in the commission under the general term disciples. To this agrees the name given to infants by the fathers, the immediate successors of the apostles, who were wont to call them “fideles,” that is, faithful ones. This name they gave to baptized infants, the infants of believers, to contradistinguish them from unbaptized infants or pagans. Indeed, the word fideles, though not altogether synonymous with the word disciple, is equivalent to it in this usage. A disciple signifies a scholar or a follower, and the term fideles signifies & faithful one, who possesses truth, and is under the influence of it in some sense. Such were infants in the estimation of the fathers, and such in substance were they called by the apostles.

You would think from the number of scriptures my opponent has referred to, that all the scriptures were in favour of his views, and that there were no passages at all that speak of infant baptism. But you remember, my friend?, that I read to you the positive command of Christ addressed to some in that age, who, like my opponent, forbad infants to be brought to Christ. This command is a very positive command. It is delivered with very great vehemence. “Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not.” How convincing the reason assigned! “for of such is the kingdom of God!” It is true that this command was delivered before the commission to baptize in the name of Christ was delivered to the apostles; but that does not affect our argument, inasmuch as infants are here said to be members of the kingdom of God. They were so in the visible church of God, instituted among the seed of Abraham, and the Saviour here declares that they are members of his kingdom as instituted under the gospel. Infants were circumcised because members of the church in the wilderness, and they are recognized as members of the church of Christ, consequently their privileges are not circumscribed or limited because members of the New Testament church. When the disciples of Christ were thus taught that infants belonged to his kingdom, they could be at no loss in determining whether they should be baptized after they had received the commission to baptize disciples. To the same effect, as was observed, the apostle called them holy. Hence we read of whole households of infants being baptized, but of this more particularly hereafter in its proper place.

Mr. Campbell will tell you no doubt again, as he has done already, that because baptism is not mentioned in those passages, they ought not to be referred to in this controversy. Yes, and from the same principle he has told you that you ought not to use the Lord's prayer, because it was taught in the early part of Christ's ministry. In this way of proceeding, a great proportion of the scriptures is useless, as respects Christians now. Indeed, according to him, but very little of the New Testament belongs to Christians now. I understand he teaches that all the Old, and some of the New, is not worthy of the regard of Christians; that is, such parts of the divine word as suit his notions and designs are obligatory, and such as do not coincide with his schemes are obsolete and inapplicable to our times. This is taking a very handsome licence with the Bible, and well suits those who wish to innovate or introduce a new order of things in the Christian church.

I now proceed, after this formal recapitulation and reference to the arguments of yesterday, to prove the identity of the church under the old and new dispensations. The proposition now before us is, “that the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are one and the same church in different dispensations. In fact, that the Christian church is a branch of the Abrahamic.”

As a visible society they are one and the same. As there has never been but one real church, so there has never been but one visible church. A visible saint is one who appears to the human eye to be a real saint; in the same manner, the visible church is a body visible to the human eye appearing to be an assembly of real saints. Now since the time that there appeared on earth a visible body of worshippers of the true God, there has been but one such at one time. The body of real saints on earth, has always been one and the same body, and was never distinguishable from the body of visible saints. The visible body of saints has always comprehended within it all such as were known as real saints; and as there has been but one real church in the world in all ages, so there has been but one visible church. Tin's is as evident as that there cannot be two bodies visibly distinct, which yet appear the same. As the real church, then, has always been the same, so the visible church has always been the same.

Many Baptists have been obliged to admit the identity and perpetuity of the real church, who, very inconsistently, deny that the visible church has always been one and the same. Perhaps this inconsistency may have originated from mistaken views of the nature of the identity for which we contend. We do not contend that they are the same in every item. No two things in the world could on this principle be called the same. In these things that are so much the same, as not to be distinguishable by even very minute notice, there are still some circumstantial differences; yet they agree in so many prominent features as to be with propriety called the same. For instance, a board of trustees are appointed by the legislature, to whom a certain concern is committed in trust. Now this board of trustees may continue for a century, until all the original trustees are succeeded by others once or twice. Yet it is still the same board, entrusted with the same concern, for the same general purposes. Who could with propriety say that it is another board of trustees, because the death or resignation of its members had given rise to new appointments! Nay, it is the same board, acting under the same laws, performing the same duties, guarding and directing the same concern, and responsible to the same tribunal, although there are some circumstantial differences.

Again, the human body is continually changing, yet it is the same human body. New blood, new flesh, and new fluids of every kind are forming every minute, so that in a little time nil the blood, flesh, and even solids in the human body are changed; and not a particle existing of what composed it a few months or years ago; yet, who will not say, that it is still the same body, distinguished by the same general characteristics, the same properties, and that it is the same temple of the same immortal soul!

Also in the body politic, the same constitution and government may continue to exist, and yet changes may be introduced of considerable variety and to a considerable extent, yet it is the same state, constitution, and government. The British constitution and government which, since the year 1689, although administered by different persons, and with some diversity of administration, is still the same constitution and government.

Mr. Campbell then addressed the assembly: — My opponent represents my late address as fragments of old sermons which I memorized some years ago. How, think ye, does he know this? Perhaps my opponent judges of others by himself. We must, however, inform him that we never write our sermons or memorize them. For seven years we have not written seven pages for public addresses. And never but once did we attempt to memorize a sermon. Written sermons, and premeditated prayers, are the meanest commodities in the world.

Mr. Maccalla will have infants disciples. Yes; speechless babes disciples of Christ, inferred from Acts xv. Although we yesterday demonstrated that the disciples mentioned in that chapter, to whom he referred, were gentile converts, capable of the actions of manhood. But as Mr. Maccalla has not impugned my criticism on the commission, but endeavours to shelter himself under the assertion, that although none but disciples are to be baptized, yet infants of eight day's old are called disciples in this passage to which he has twice referred; I say, seeing he has not impugned the aforesaid criticism, and rests his escape from its truth on the assertion that infants are called disciples in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts, I now propose to him, in the presence of you all, that if he will prove that infants are called disciples in that chapter, I will give up the cause which I have espoused. Let him then lay aside every other topic, and open this chapter. I will pledge my erudition, my critical acumen, my respectability as a scholar, that he cannot, upon the investigation of that reference—nay, I will rest the whole controversy upon it. If he proves this one point we shall say all is proved, and his cause triumphant. The conditions are assuredly most easy, and this “brings us to a speedy issue.”

His references to “suffer little children,” and to the “holy children,” are condemned by his own Confession of Faith, according to the rules of interpretation prescribed in that Confession. He has not, in his late address, adverted to the objection I made to them before, from that rule of interpretation. The sense of every passage of scripture is ONE; consequently, as baptism was not referred to on the occasion of the pronunciation of these words, they have no reference to this controversy.

I am not a little surprised at his remarks on a criticism mentioned yesterday, on a petition of the prayer taught by the Lord to his disciples. Indeed the whole ministry of John appears to be very indistinctly apprehended by Mr. Maccalla. The different ages or dispensations, as they are called, are, by Pedobaptists in general, very slightly noticed. The patriarchal age, the Jewish age, the ministry of John, and the Christian age, are marked in the volumes of inspiration with very striking characters. The patriarchal with propriety may be assimilated to starlight; the Jewish, to moonlight; the era of John the Baptist to twilight; and the Christian age to sunlight. Light increased from the first promise made to Adam until the administration of the Spirit was completed. Different forms of worship existed under all these ages by divine authority. What would have been acceptable worship in the days of the priesthood of Melchisedec, would not have been acceptable in the age of the priesthood of Aaron; and what was acceptable in the days of Aaron, would not be acceptable in the days of our great High Priest. It is a maxim of great significance, and of universal application, pronounced by the Prince of commentators, “The priesthood being changed, there is of necessity a change also in the law.” The worship of the patriarchs, Jews, and Christians, though addressed to the same God, was, notwithstanding, very dissimilar. This, we presume, needs no proof. But with regard to the ministry of John, we would be more particular. His light was neither starlight, moonlight, nor sunlight; it was twilight, or a mixture of the three. The burden of his preaching was, “reformation, for the reign of God approached.” His doctrine, manner of life, baptism, and exhortations were all in many respects novel. He even taught his disciples to pray in a way suited to his teaching. Great, however, as this prophet was, the least prophet under the new reign of God was to be a greater prophet than he; better instructed in the nature of the reign of Messiah, in the meaning and design of the kingdom of heaven or Christian age, than this reformer of the Jews’ religion, and herald of the Christian. John preached a new doctrine, practised a baptism suited to it, exhorted the people suitably thereunto, and taught his disciples to pray conformably. The Messiah honoured this roan and his baptism. He commended him as the greatest teacher ever sent to Israel, and submitted to his baptism as a divine institute. “Thus,” said he, when soliciting John’s compliance, it “becometh me to honour every divine institute.”

The first commission given to the twelve, and the baptism annexed thereunto, was of the same nature as that of John’s. The same doctrine of reformation was taught by our Lord, the twelve, and the seventy; and the same motive urged, viz.: — “The reign of heaven approached” The geographical lines that bounded the tribes of Israel, bounded their labours. The prayers taught, and the religious worship enjoined, were adapted to this state of things as exclusively as Solomon’s prayer, 1 Kings, viii. was exclusively adapted to the dedication of the temple. Mr. Maccalla might as rationally, as scripturally, as consistently, teach his people to pray in the words of Solomon’s dedication, as in the words of the prayer in question. They were both divinely inspired too, and both perfectly adapted to a precise object. Dull is the apprehension, and prejudiced the mind, that cannot see a distinction so plain, so palpable, so important too, as the distinction now offered. Let my opponent consider how he would reason with one who would now worship God according to the priesthood of Aaron, and he will find arguments for me to put him to silence when advocating that Christians should now pray for the “reign of God to come” when it has come; and for addressing God without the name of Jesus, when he is placed a priest upon his throne, an intercessor within the true holy place.
The design of John's baptism, and the design of the baptism instituted by Christ, is very different. John's baptism, like his preaching, was the "baptism of reformation." His errand into this world was to prepare a people for the Lord. His preaching, his baptism, and his prayers, were alike preparatory. We know that many have said that John's baptism and Christian baptism are one and the same, as my opponent affirms of the Jewish and Christian churches, but it is as impossible to prove that these two baptisms are one and the same, as it is to prove that two churches are one, and how things different can be the same, requires the sagacity of Pedobaptists to comprehend. The action of baptism is the same, whether a man, a woman, a child, a table, a cup, or a spoon be baptized. As far as the modus is concerned, all baptisms are the same. But the nature and doctrinal import or design of these two baptisms are quite different. Let us hear Paul expatiate on the "baptism of John." Acts xix. 4. "John," says Paul, "verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him that was to come, or which should come after him, i. e. on Christ Jesus." This exposition of the meaning of John's baptism is infallible, and shows it to have been of an import different from that ordained by Jesus Christ. So much so, that those baptized of John were to be baptized for the remission of sins, in the name of Christ as having come. Luke tells us in the same chapter, that when the subjects of John's baptism heard the nature and design of that baptism explained, "they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." And of all the thousands in Jerusalem, in Judea, and in the region round about, who had been baptized in the baptism of John, some of whom doubtless believed in Christ as having come, not one was received into the church until baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. We never read of one having been excepted, or excused from being baptized for the remission of sins, because he had been baptized by John, confessing his sins in the baptism of reformation; but we read of some having been baptized in both the "baptism of repentance, and the baptism for the remission of sins." A proper subject of John's baptism was one who professed repentance, confessed his sins, and reformed; declaring his persuasion that the reign of God was at hand, that Messiah the king was just about to reign. A proper subject of the baptism ordained by Christ, is one who declares his belief that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, that he has come, and is crowned Lord of all, and that remission of sins is bestowed through his name to all who believe and are baptized. The subjects of John's baptism were immersed in the act of confessing their sins, and avowing their reformation of life; the subjects of the Lord's baptism are immersed calling upon the Lord, washing away their sins, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. How different were the views of those who expected, and only hoped for the coming of the Just One, and the views of those who believed that Christ crucified was he. But our time forbids us to attempt to finish our remarks on the design and import of Christian baptism.

Mr. MacCalla proceeds: —

When I last addressed you, my friends, I was going on with the demonstration of the identity of the Jews and Christian churches. I had observed that many things may be said to be one and the same, which yet differ in some circumstantial matters. Even the Baptists themselves, who pride themselves so much in the peculiarity of the constitution of their churches and discipline, have existing among them, in their church covenants, a very considerable diversity, yet they contend that the constitution of their churches is one and the same. And although in their discipline they may widely differ in some points, yet they say that their discipline is essentially one and the same, because executed on the same general principles. Some of them, indeed, would represent their church as being the same with those mentioned in the New Testament, and as having been always one and the same, in regular descent from John the Baptist until now, although they are unable to trace their existence for some hundreds of years up to John.

The church at Augusta over which I preside, it is known has undergone considerable change since I was placed over it. It has been new modified in some respects, and alterations to a considerable extent have been effected, yet who would say that it is not the same Presbyterian church; yes, one and the same essentially.

The people also that compose a state may be one and the same people, though living under different constitutions
ON BAPTISM.  111

The constitution of Virginia and that of Kentucky are different constitutions, yet the people who have lived under both are still the same people. Their privileges may be diversified and magnified to a great extent, there may be very material alterations in their circumstances, living under different constitutions and laws, yet they are still the same people. In fine, many things may be identically the same in the common conceptions of mankind, and yet different from each other in some respects. And if we were to allow that no two things are the same, which do not coincide in every instance, in all their essential and accidental properties, in all their primary and secondary qualities, we should be constrained to banish from our dictionaries, and from our mouths, the word identity; and to affirm that no two things are or can be the same.

These things premised, I proceed to observe that the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are one and the same church, though in different dispensations, insomuch that the latter is “merely a branch of the former. In proving the truth of this proposition I will observe the following method. I will prove,

1. That they had the same religion,
2. That they had the same inspired names,
3. That they had the same covenant.

These we conceive to be the grand essential properties which constitute religious societies one and the same, in all primary points. Any two religious societies (that possess the same theology and morality, that are called by all the same names and appellations, and that exist nuclei' the same grand constitution or covenant, form but one and the same social compact, and are called, in the proper and legitimate use of the word, one and the same church. 1. They had the same religion.

It must be admitted that the Jews and Christians were both professors of religion. Now the Jews professed the true religion as divinely revealed and instituted. I presume it will be allowed that the visible church under the present dispensation professes the true religion. As there is but one true religion, and as both the Jewish society and the Christian society have professed the true religion, it is, we think, evident that they both professed the same religion. If any person should deny that the Jews professed the true religion, we have recorded truths to produce against their conviction. Deut. xxvi. 17. Moses saith, “Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his commandments, and to hearken to his voice.” This is not only a solemn, but a formal avowal or profession of the religion appointed of God. Moses was a witness, and a credible witness of this formal profession of all Israel, to walk in the ways, and to obey the commandments of the Lord. Now as there is but one God, and one heaven, and only one way from this world to the heavenly world, ever since the fall of Adam, there has been but one true religion. And we have already seen that the seed of Abraham professed this one true religion; but Christians profess or avow the Lord to be their God, and promise to walk in all his ways, consequently profess the same religion with the Jews.

In the next place they not only professed the same religion, as respected the object of religious fear, reverence, and respect, but they had substantially the same ordinances of religious worship. Circumcision, the passover, and the sabbath, were primary ordinances amongst the Jews, and these were substantially the same as baptism, the supper, and the Christian sabbath. Circumcision was to them a mark of separation, a sign of regeneration, the token of putting off the sins of the flesh. Infants and adults were both proper subjects of circumcision. The children of the members of the church were circumcised at the age of eight days, because they were the children of the faithful, and born within the covenant. Adults, who had been aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, on being morally convinced of the true God, and of the true religion, before they entered the congregation of the Lord, were commanded to be circumcised. In like manner, the infants of believers are to be baptized, because the children of the faithful, and born within the same covenant. Adults also, whose parents belonged not to the church of Christ, and who are morally convinced of the true God, and of his salvation, are to be baptized, before admission into his church.

The passover was a commemorative ordinance substantially the same as the Lord’s supper. The former commemorated the redemption of Israel from Egyptian darkness and bondage, by means of the shedding and sprinkling of blood. The latter commemorates our redemption from ignorance and the bondage of guilt, by the shedding of the blood of the Lamb of God, that taketh away sin. The former was eaten with every sign of repentance, and with all holy preparation of heart, with solemn convocations and religious self-denial, the latter is observed by all true Christians in a similar manner. Days of solemn preparation, fasting, and thanksgiving accompanied the eating of the paschal lamb, and similar days of preparation, fasting, and thanksgiving do accompany the celebration of the holy supper.

The sabbath also amongst the Jews and Christians is a day of holy rest, of holy convocation; a day set apart for profound contemplation, worship, and edification, in which no manner of servile labour is to be performed, no part of the time appropriated to our own works, except so much as is taken up in the works of necessity and mercy.

In the third place, the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, have adopted the same forms of worship as well as the same grand ordinances. The children of Israel sang the praises of the God of Jacob in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs. They lifted up the voice of praise and thanksgiving. The melody of joy, gratitude, and praise was heard in the dwellings of Jacob, in the assemblies of Zion. In the stated meetings of the congregation of the Lord the psalms of David, the same psalms which are yet sung, and by many Baptists too, were sung. They stood upright, and kneeled down in their worship, and used in general the same forms of worship which are yet used in the congregations of the saints. Can these religious societies be essentially distinct which have professed the true religion, worshiped the same God, observed the same ordinances of worship, and the same forms of prayer, of praise, and thanksgiving!

The same injunctions have been laid upon the visible church in all ages, and uniformly she has been subject to the same requirements. God now requires his people to be holy, holy in all manner of deportment, for, “without holiness no man can see the Lord.” Now the same injunctions were laid upon the Jewish society before Christ. See Lev. xix. 2. “Speak unto all the congregation of Israel, and say unto them, ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy.” Love to God also, with all their souls, might, and strength, was required from the Jewish society as well as from the Christian. And, with respect to our neighbours, the good Samaritan does not remind us more fully or forcibly of our duty, than the injunctions laid on Israel by an ancient prophet. “Do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God.”

Mr. Campbell arose: —

The identity of the Jewish society before Christ, and the Presbyterian society or Episcopalian society after Christ, may be rendered very plain and striking by Mr. Maccalla; but that the Christian church and the Jewish are one and the same, is another question. The very assertion that any two societies can be one and the same, shocks all common sense, as well as oppugns the most explicit testimony of holy writ. But we shall let Mr. Maccalla get through with his proof before we examine his argument. In the meantime we will state two facts, which, so long as you keep them in mind, volumes of such arguments as you have heard will avail nothing in reference to this controversy.

The first fact is, that Nicodemus, an honourable member of the Jewish society, yea, a teacher of Israel, an officer of the Jewish church, could not be admitted unto the Christian church, though a lawful member of the Jewish, and a regular officer of the church of Israel, unless born again, of water and of the Spirit. If the two churches are one and the same, Mr. Maccalla, how could this be!

A second fact is, that not one of all the members of this Jewish society before Christ, how pious and holy soever; not one of the members of the church of Israel was admitted into the Christian church, after its exhibition on the day of Pentecost, until born again, of water and of the Spirit: until repentance and a new faith was professed. If the two churches are one and the same, Mr. Maccalla, how could this be! Unless Mr. Maccalla, my friends, can disprove what I have now said, unless he can set aside these facts, it is of no consequence to tell us about the identity of two societies that withal he admits to be different in some respects! These facts you will please keep in mind as a sufficient refutation of the misapplication of many things proposed on the subject of “identity,” until more formally exposed.
But I have something to say on my opponent's plan and design in introducing the identity of the two churches that may, and ought to claim a place in your attention. It is this. Mr. Maccalla, theologically considered, is digging his own grave. He is, in fact, about to defeat his own cause, and to subvert his own theses; for as soon as he has proved the identity of the two societies, so soon will he have destroyed his whole scheme. This we now assert, and we pledge ourselves to make it manifest as soon as he says he has proved the point.

The case will stand thus. If Mr. Maccalla does not prove the "identity" of the Jewish and Christian societies, this being fundamental in his scheme, he is, on his own principles, defeated. And I now assert, and pledge myself to prove hereafter, that if he does prove their identity, he has not only killed, but buried himself. In either case, his cause is lost. On this ground it will be proved that the Pedobaptist cause is untenable.

While I am noticing this position of my opponent, it may not be amiss to express my astonishment not only at the boldness of my antagonist, but at his imprudence in calling the Christian church a "branch" of the Abrahamic church. He should not have laid himself open to be discredited, or to be put to silence by every stripling who could ask the following question: Is not a branch inferior to the stem or trunk from which it grows? Look at these trees around us, shew us a branch that is not inferior to the trunk from which it receives its nourishment. And is, Mr. Maccalla, the Christian church, but a branch of the Abrahamic, inferior to the Jewish!!! Tell it not to those who admire the superlative glory and dignity of the Christian religion and Christian church, in comparison of the commonwealth of Israel, and the weak and beggarly elements, that Mr. Maccalla has proved it to be only A BRANCH of the Abrahamic!!!

I now proceed to finish, if possible, my third argument in proof of my first proposition, viz. that a believer is the only subject of baptism. You will recollect that my third argument is drawn from the import and design of Christian baptism. I have in my two last addresses paid some attention to this consideration. In my first address this morning, I read sundry portions of the New Testament expressive of the important place that baptism occupies in the Christian religion, and of its great significance. In my last address I contra-distinguished its design from that of John's baptism. In exalting baptism to its proper place, I did not exaggerate its import, as Mr. Maccalla would have it. Nor did I elevate it so as to displace hope and charity. These are graces, the fruits of true faith and true baptism. I know it will be said that I have affirmed that baptism “saves us,” that it “washes away sins.” Well, Peter and Paul have said so before me. If it was not criminal in them to say so, it cannot be criminal in me. When Ananias said unto Paul, “Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord,” I suppose Paul believed him, and arose, was baptized, and washed away his sins. When he was baptized he must have believed that his sins were now washed away in some sense that they were not before. For if his sins had been already in every sense washed away, Ananias' address would have led him into a mistaken view of himself; both before and after baptism. Now we confess that the blood of Jesus Christ alone cleanses us from all sins. Even this, however, is a metaphorical expression. The efficacy of his blood springs from his own dignity, and from the appointment of his Father. The blood of Christ, then, really cleanses us who believe from all sin. Behold the goodness of God in giving us a formal proof and token of it, by ordaining a baptism expressly “for the remission of sins!” The water of baptism, then, formally washes away our sins. The blood of Christ really washes away our sins. Paul's sins were really pardoned when he believed, yet he had no solemn pledge of the fact, no formal acquittal, no formal purgation of his sins, until he washed them away in the water of baptism.

To every believer, therefore, baptism is a formal and personal remission, or purgation of sins. The believer never has his sins formally washed away or remitted until he is baptized. The water has no efficacy but what God's appointment gives it, and he has made it sufficient for this purpose. The value and importance of baptism appears from this view of it. It also accounts for baptism being called the WASHING OF REGENERATION. It shews us a good, and valid reason for the despatch with which this ordinance was administered in the primitive church. The believers did not lose a moment in obtaining the remission of their sins. Paul tarried three days after he believed, which was the longest delay recorded in the New Testament. The reason, of this delay was the wonderful accompaniments of his conversion and preparation for the apostolic office. He was blind three days, scales fell from his eyes, he arose then forthwith and was baptized. The three thousand who first believed, on the selfsame day were baptized for the remission of their sins. Yea, even the jailor and his house would not wait till daylight but the “same hour of the night, in which he believed, he and all his were baptized,” I say, this view of baptism accounts for all these otherwise unaccountable circumstances. It was this view of baptism misapplied that originated infant baptism. The first errorist on this subject argued that if baptism was so necessary for the remission of sins, it should be administered to infants whom they represented as in great need of it on account of their “original sin.” Affectionate parents, believing their children to be guilty of “original sin,” were easily persuaded to have their infants baptized for the remission of “original sin,” not for washing away sins actually committed. But of this again.

Faith in Christ is necessary to forgiveness of sins, therefore, baptism without faith is an unmeaning ceremony. Even the Confession of Faith, or at least the Larger Catechism, question 185, says, “that baptism is a sign of remission of sins.” How then can it be administered to those without faith? Is it to them “a sign and seal of engrafting into Christ, of remission of sins by his blood, and regeneration by his Spirit,” as the answer to this question declares?

Our argument from this topic is, that baptism, being ordained to be to a believer a formal and personal remission of all his sins, cannot be administered unto an infant without the greatest perversion and abuse of the nature and import of this ordinance. Indeed, why should an infant that never sinned, that, as Calvinists say, is guilty only of “original sin,” which is an unit, be baptized for the remission of sins!

We have heard some Baptists reduce this significant ordinance to the level of a moral example, or a moral precept. Says one, “I was baptized to follow the example of Christ, who was baptized in a river.” Then you are baptized to follow the example of Christ. You are honest too, and speak the truth. In these respects you follow the example of Christ, You place honesty and baptism on the same footing, as alike moral duties. “But,” says another, “I was baptized in obedience to a divine command.” I presume you “don’t steal” for the same reason. You then make baptism and honesty alike moral duties. The intelligent and well-instructed Christian, however, is baptized to obtain the formal remission of his sins. He is baptized “TO WASH AWAY HIS SINS, calling upon the name of the Lord.”

Here let us pause and admire the divine philanthropy which has appeared to all men. God so loved the world, that, unasked, unsolicited, of his own free will and good pleasure, he sent his only begotten Son into the world, not to condemn it, but that WHOSOEVER believeth in him, or, in other words, believes the record he has given of him, might he saved; might be pardoned, accepted, raised incorruptible, and enjoy eternal life. He appointed baptism to be to every one that believed the record he has given of his Son, a formal pledge on his part of that believer’s personal acquittal or pardon so significant, and so expressive, that when the baptized believer rises out of the water, is born of water, enters the world a second time; he enters it as innocent, as clean, as unspotted, as an angel. His conscience is purged from guilt, his body washed with pure wafer, even the washing of regeneration. He puts himself under the priesthood of Jesus, under his tuition and government. If afterwards he sins through the weakness and corruption of human nature, or the temptation of the adversary, lie, in the spirit of repentance, comes to his Advocate, confesses his fault, and obtains pardon. Thus the Christian religion teaches all who are initiated how to enjoy peace with God, to have a conscience void of offence, and at the same time to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world, looking for the glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ. They who object to this view of the abundance of divine grace, because of its supposed licentious tendency, have yet to learn that love constrains to holiness, and that the more fully it is manifested, the greater is its influence in purifying the heart, and in reforming the life.
Before I sit down I wish to remind the congregation of the challenge given my opponent to investigate the 15th chapter of the Acts, and that in his last address he did not so much as name it. He has then given up that point.

Mr. MACCALLA arose: —

Mr. Campbell reminds you of his challenging me to a disquisition on a part of the 16th of the Acts; and because I will not leave my course to meet him there, he proclaims me vanquished. He resembles one who challenges some person to fight him. After a while some person encounters him; he then challenges that person to let go, and because he will not let go, he proclaims himself victor. It seems I must be vanquished at all events. Take what course I may, I must be defeated. Like a friend of mine who was invited to dine with a gentleman of a very singular turn of mind. He was often requested to eat, and indeed censured for not eating more. He was so hard pressed that he addressed his host, saying, “I have eaten as much as I can,” and, replied his host, “what a glutton you are to eat as much as you can!”

In proving the identity of the Jewish and Christian church, I have first to prove that they had the same religion, or theology and morality. They both professed the true religion—had substantially the same ordinances—were under the same requirements—and had the same forms of religion.

Again, the same doctrines were taught in the Old Testament and in the New, and the same promises were given. Luke x. 25. “A certain lawyer stood up, and tempted Christ, saying, Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? He said unto him, What is written in the law? How readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shall love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself. And he said unto him, Thou shalt answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.” Thus we see on a point of saving importance, the same doctrine was taught in the New Testament that was taught in the Old. This also shows us that the way of salvation was the same in all ages. This was something very unlike making baptism a saving ordinance, or ascribing to it the power of washing away all sins, as my opponent has lately done.

The promises made to the Jews and Christians are also the same. The Lord promised temporal blessings to his followers, Matt. vi. 33. “Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all those things shall be added unto you;” that is, food and raiment sufficient for your comfort. “Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come.” Thus Paul taught the Christians, exhibiting temporal promises as well as spiritual. The same arguments made use of by David are used by the apostle Peter, to excite to a virtuous and happy life. “If a man will live long, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and let his lips speak no guile; let him do good, let him seek peace, and pursue it: for the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open to their cry.” The same kind of temporal promises are made to the Jews, Lev. xxvi. 3, 6, “If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; then I will give you rain in due season; and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit; and your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing time: and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely. And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid: and I will send evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land.” Many, very many similar promises were given unto Israel respecting temporal blessings. To the church of Israel he gave also spiritual promises. “Fear not, for I am with thee: be not dismayed, for I am thy God,” said he to Israel. To the saints in the New Testament he says, “Lo, I am with you always, to the end of the world,” He promised to defend the Jewish church, “The Lord of hosts will defend Jerusalem, and passing over he will preserve it.” He also promises to defend the Christian church, 2 These. iii. 3. “The Lord is faithful who shall establish you, and keep you from evil.” “The gates of hell shall not prevail against my church,” said its Founder. He has promised to build up the Christian church, and to the ancient Israel he promised the same. Acts xv. 16.; Jer. xxxi. 3, 4. “I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: I have loved thee with an everlasting love.” How similar the promises made to the saints under the Old Testament and the New, in a church state and in an individual capacity.
ON BAPTISM.

The church under the former and the present dispensation has been under the same discipline, at least under similar discipline. Under the Old, the law was, “Thou shall not hate thy brother in thy heart: thou shall in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him.” Lev. xix. 17. Christ now says, “If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone.”

Under the Old Testament it was, when the offender shall bring his sin offering, and in token of repentance lay his hand on its head, the victim shall be slain, and he shall be forgiven. Lev. iv. Christ now says, “If thy brother repent, forgive him.”

Under the law, “The soul that doeth ought presumptuously, and will not hearken to the priest nor to the judge, the same hath reproached the Lord, and that soul shall be cut off from his people.” And under the gospel dispensation the rule is, “If the offender will not hear the church, let him be cut off from her communion, and become to you as an heathen man or a publican.” Assuredly the similarity of discipline in the congregation of the Lord, under Moses, and in the church of Christ, must strike every person with force, and prove the identity of the two churches.

The government of both churches is the same. It was by presbyters or elders, it was in this sense presbyterian, See Acts xiv. 23. “And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed,” “For this cause left I thee in Crete,” said Paul to Titus, chap. 1. 5. “that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee.” Here we read of the elders of the city, and of the elders of the congregation in the New Testament, and you all remember, my friends, in speaking of the officers of the Jewish church, that we shewed they had elders of cities, and elders of the whole congregation. So far the prominent features of their government are one and the same. In the next place their manner of discipline was the same. Rom. xi. 20. Those that believed were added to the Jewish church by circumcision, and they were broken off through unbelief. Under the gospel dispensation believers are added to the church by baptism, and he that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 16. Indeed the visible church under every dispensation has been composed of characters essentially similar. It has been always of a mixed character. Good men and bad men, hypocrites and faithful disciples have been found in the church in every age. In the words of Mr. Porter we may say, “Revivals and declensions, divisions and sects, defects and excellencies, have existed in it, and been common in each and every period of time, from its commencement to the present moment.” See his Dis. on baptism, pp. 24, 25.

Thus we have seen that the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, have had the same religion, in profession, in ordinances, in forms of worship, in requirements, in doctrine, in promises, in discipline, in government, and in members.

I now proceed to show, in the second place, that they had the same “inspired names.” Names are signs of things, they are the representations of things; words are the representations of ideas, and ideas are the images of things. When names are different, the things are different; and when names are the same, things are the same. It may happen that fallible beings may affix the same names to things that differ, and thus mislead the judgment of others; but when God has affixed the same names to things, we are sure that there is no mistake: the things are really the same. Now the Jewish society and the Christian are called by the same inspired names.

Mr. Campbell then addressed the assembly: — My friends, this is the most singular discussion I have either seen or read of. What is the subject of controversy? What were your expectations in coming hither? To hear a discussion upon church government, discipline, doctrine? &c., &c. Is this the topic under discussion? In this course of procedure there can be no debate. Mr. Maccalla and I resemble two ships at sea; he sails in latitude 40 north, and I in latitude 40 south; each bound for his own port. We may pass each other in one latitude on our voyage. We may then salute each other and proceed. Is this the order of debates in schools, in deliberative bodies, on any topic, in any country? Have I not opened this debate, or have I not taken an affirmative proposition? If Mr. Maccalla be my opponent, he is I presume bound to respond to me; he is bound to proceed according to the rules of respondents; if he be not my opponent, why did he engage to discuss this subject? Why did he agree to take the negative side in this controversy? Before I proceed in waging this strange and unprecedented warfare in which my antagonist will not attack me, nor defend himself when attacked, but is fighting with some unseen antagonist, and occasionally talking to me, I say, before I proceed farther in this course, I appeal to the moderators on a question of order.

Gentlemen, I know your powers in moderating this controversy are very limited. This is not my fault. I was willing to lodge all necessary power in your bands. To this Mr. Maccalla would not agree. Yet still I think you have the power of deciding whether we ought to proceed this way. One of those items in your hand says, that you are “to keep order” in this discussion. The question then is, Is it order in controversy for the respondent to introduce affirmative propositions on any subject he pleases; and instead of responding in the negative to his opponent, to spend his time in proving his own affirmations on other topics? This question I respectfully submit to your decision, [Bishop Verdeman, after a number of remarks and references (which we are sorry cannot be correctly stated, as there were no minutes taken of the speeches of the moderators on such occasions), gave it as his conviction, “that it was out of order for Mr. Maccalla to proceed in this way.” The Rev. Birch replied to the bishop that his opinion was different: that he knew from his own experience that Mr. Maccalla was taking the only correct course to substantiate his cause, and that there was no other way of proceeding orderly to prove the points at issue.

Major Roper apologized that he was not skilled in such questions; that in deliberative bodies he knew that etiquette required the respondent to speak to the question submitted, in reference to which he spake. But that he knew of no rules obliging him so to do, and that therefore the parties, he presumed, in consequence of the limited nature of the rules authorizing their interference, would have to pursue each his own course.

Mr. Campbell then proceeded: —We must then it seems just proceed in this way. To this course I must submit;
yes, I will cheerfully submit, although I differ in opinion with the decision of the bench. On these principles we shall have no debate unless I formally attack Mr.
Maccalla. This I will do from necessity, whenever he brings his second argument to a close.

In the mean time I return to the baptism of believers. Mr. Maccalla in his last speech incidentally remarked that I had ascribed a saving power to baptism. Why then did he not accuse Paul and Peter of the same, for they spake as unguardedly on this topic as we? Or, rather, why did he not tell us the meaning of those scriptures that were adduced on this item? So long as we affirm that baptism, ACCOMPANIED WITH FAITH IN THE SUBJECT, washes away all sins, and that baptism WITHOUT faith is an insignificant ceremony, so long we feel ourselves invulnerable on every side, from every attack, from every arm. Let Mr. Maccalla refute my views now if he can, and not hereafter say that I said so and so. Here I am to defend them and to illustrate them still farther.

On this topic I would rally again. Its grand importance to all disciples will excuse me for being diffuse on this subject; also its aspect to Pedobaptism is such as to frown it out of the world. This Mr. Maccalla sees, and therefore he frowns contemptuously at it. Peter promised to three thousand Jews forgiveness on repentance and baptism. “What shall we do,” said they, in an agony of despair?
Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of the Lord Jesus, for the remission of sins. The preposition “eis” here means in order to—in order to the remission of sins. Now I would say to any person or persons inquiring what they should do, just what Peter said, “Repent and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, in order to the remission of sins.” “What God hath joined together let not man put asunder.” God hath in the first opening of the new religion, associated repentance and baptism in order to the remission of sins; and let him take heed to himself who preaches repentance in order to the forgiveness of sins, without baptism in water; or who preaches baptism in order to forgiveness without repentance or faith. We have already seen that Ananias preached baptism to one possessed of faith in order to the washing away of sins; so that we may safely say that a believer unbaptized has not his sins
washed away in a very important sense. If, as Paul affirms, Titus iii. 3—6. God our Saviour saved sinners, dia toutrou paliggeaesias, by the washing of regeneration and renewal of the Holy Spirit; then indeed we may be bold to affirm, “except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God,” and he only that believes, and is baptized, shall be saved.

My Baptist brethren, as well as the Pedobaptist brotherhood, I humbly conceive, require to be admonished on this point. You have been, some of you no doubt, too diffident in asserting this grand import of baptism, in urging an immediate submission to this sacred and gracious ordinance, lest your brethren should say that you make every thing of baptism; that you make it essential to salvation. Tell them that you make nothing essential to salvation but the blood of Christ, but that God has made baptism essential to their formal forgiveness in this life, to their admission into his kingdom on earth. Tell them that God has made it essential to their happiness that they should have a pledge on his part in this life, an assurance in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, of their actual pardon, of the remission of all their sins, and that this assurance is baptism. Tell the disciples to rise in haste and be baptized and wash away their sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

In the next place, under this head, all the promises connected with baptism are addressed to such as believe. Remission of sins; the promise of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost; their participation in the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and every other promise connected directly or indirectly with baptism, is given to such only as believe before they are baptized. Of this all the Epistles are proof. “If you have been planted together in the likeness of his death, you shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection,” said Paul to the Romans. To the Corinthians; ye who were once vile, abandoned, profane, are renewed and accepted, because washed in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. All the promises made to the churches were made to then), as Paul spake to the Hebrews, “as having,” said he, “our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water,” or with clean water; so called from its cleansing power by divine appointment.
In the last place, under this head, all the actions said to have been performed by such as were baptized, are of such a character as to preclude the idea of any other than believers having been baptized. The baptized are said to have gladly received the word, to hear the word, to rejoice, to be added to the church on the day of their baptism, to continue in the apostles’ doctrine, in breaking of bread, in prayers, praising God. They are said to have put on Christ, to have put off the old man, to have crucified the flesh, and to have risen with Christ, &c.

I have, I humbly conceive, my friends and brethren, fully established my first proposition on scripture premises, viz. “that a believer is the only subject of baptism.” You will recollect that out of the many topics of proof, I only selected the five following as evidence: —

1. That the law of baptism authorises the baptism of believers only, and in fact forbids virtually the baptism of any others.
2. That the apostles in the execution of their commission in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and to the uttermost-parts of the earth, never baptized any other than a professed believer or a disciple.
3. That the nature and design of baptism is suited to believers only,
4. That the promises connected with baptism are addressed to believers only.
5. That the actions of the baptized at the time, and immediately subsequent to their baptism mentioned in all the New Testament, are such as infants could not perform. These topics of argument we deem sufficient to prove the above proposition. And you will have the goodness to bear in mind that not one of them has been formally impugned by Mr. Maccalla. We consider them then, as far as respects him, unanswerable.

Mr. MACCALLA read as follows: —

I am now to show that the Jewish and Christian societies are called by the same inspired names.

The Jewish society are called a bride, or married wife, Jer. iii. 14. “Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you; and I will take you one of a city and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion; I will give you pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.” We plainly see who is here recognized as a bride. And in Revelation xxi. 9. The church of Jesus Christ is called by the same spirit of Revelation, “the bride, the Lamb’s wife,” one espoused to Christ as a chaste virgin. Says Solomon, “my love my undefiled is one,” speaking of the church, as all agree.

They are both called a house. Heb. iii. 2—6. “The high priest of our profession Christ Jesus was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who had builded the house hath more honour than the house: for every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.” Here the Jewish society are called a house over which Moses was faithful, and we Christians are called a house over which Christ is faithful. Jesus Christ is here said to have builded, and to have been proprietor of that house, in which Moses was merely a servant.

The visible church under both dispensations is also exhibited as the flock of Christ, Psalm lxxx. 1, “Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph as a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubims, shine forth.” The same person whom David calls the Lord his Shepherd, the shepherd of the flock of Israel, is called by Paul, Heb. xiii. 20. the great Shepherd of the sheep: —and these sheep are Christ’s flock.

The Jewish and Christian societies are called a barn and the same threshing floor. —Matt. xiii. 30. “gather the wheat into my barn.” John the Baptist saith, he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner. Now this was the Jewish floor that he was to cleanse—and the wheat was to be put into his barn or garner.

They are both called a nation and a kingdom. Ex. xix. 5, 6. “If ye obey my voice, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be unto me a peculiar treasure above all people. And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation.” Thus he spake to the Jews. Now hear him address the Christians, I Pet. ii. 9. “Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people.”
The Jews and Christians are called the people of God. "I will walk among you, and will he your God, and ye shall be my people.” He says of the Christians too, “I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will he their God, and they shall be my people.” Lev. xxvi. 12. 2 Cor, vi. 16. here they are both called by the same inspired names.

The visible church under both dispensations is also called an “olive tree.” Jeremiah addressing the Old Testament church, says, (xi. 16.) “the Lord called thy name a green olive tree, fair and of goodly fruit.” Hosea the prophet uses the same language (xiv. 6). “His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree.” This olive tree which the apostle makes so much use of, represents the visible church of God. It must mean the Jewish church exclusively, or the Christian church exclusively; the invisible church, or no church at all. It cannot mean the Christian church commencing on the day of Pentecost, for the Jews never belonged unto it. It could not mean no church, for from what were the branches broken off: the branches could not mean infidels! Nor could it mean the invisible church, for from this there is no exclusion nor cutting off. If it docs not mean no church, nor the Christian church, nor the invisible church, then it must mean the Jewish visible church. From this the unbelieving Jews were broken off, Rom. xi. Into this the gentiles, or the branches of the wild olive, were grafted in. That this is the meaning, the paragraph when read will show. “For I speak to you gentiles; inasmuch as I am the apostle of the gentiles, I magnify mine office: if by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save some of them. For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead? For if the first-fruit be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches. And if some of the branches he broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in. Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not highminded, but fear: for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou shall be also cut off. And they also, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again. For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive tree?”—Rom. xi. 13—24. In reading this, for the good olive tree substitute the Jewish church, for the natural branches substitute the Jews, for those broken off, the unbelieving Jews, and for the wild olive, the gentiles, and for partaking of the root and fatness, substitute participating with the Jews in church privileges, and there is no difficulty in the passage.

They are both called the kingdom of heaven. “Many,” said the Saviour, “shall come from the east and from the west, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.” By the words “kingdom of heaven” we cannot here understand the kingdom of glory, the mansions of future bliss, for none of the members of that kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness. Those “coining from the east and west,” must mean the gentiles; “sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,” must mean entering into the Jewish church, becoming one with it. The children of the kingdom must mean the then members of the Jewish church, to whom belonged first of all the blessings of membership in that kingdom; their being “cast out” is equivalent to their being “cut off” from the good olive tree; and the gentiles sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is precisely equivalent to the branches of the wild olive, being graffed in among the natural branches.

How remarkably coincident are those portions of the oracles of God in expressing one grand fact, one important truth, of deep interest to all the church to know, else it would not have been so often repeated, and inculcated with so great variety of illustration, with such marked emphasis, and with so much perspicuity! The church of Israel being called the good olive tree, and the kingdom of heaven; the breaking off of the natural branches, and the casting out of the children of the kingdom; the engrafting of the branches of the wild olive, and the people of the east and west sitting down with the heads of the Jewish church, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, not only applies the same inspired names to both societies, but shows that both societies make but one and the same church, or kingdom of heaven.

Mr. Campbell then rejoined: —

As this discussion is likely to be long protracted, I will now address you, my respected friends, on the word religion. As Mr. Maccalla has spent much of this day in asserting the identity of the Jewish and Christian religion, I may be allowed to make some remarks on a topic that engrosses so much of his attention. You are not, however, to consider me as formally attacking his argument. Yet my remarks will have some bearing upon it. A complete refutation of it we promise you when it is closed.

Religion is a word of very common occurrence, yet like many others in common usage, it is not on that account the better understood. Some people are said "to have got religion," and others are exhorted "to get it." This religion is something that is supposed to dwell in the heart, and is sometimes called "heart religion."—We have never seen any person who had not some kind of religion. Indeed, religion has been supposed to be so common an endowment, that some logicians have made it the differential quality or attribute of man. Hence said they,—"man is a religious animal." Religion considered in this light, is simply, "respect for a Supreme Being," and, as the poet sings, it makes little matter what he is called. His infidel verse thus reads,

"Father of all, in every age,
   In every clime ador'd
By saint, by savage, and by sage, Jehovah, Jove, or Lord."

This illustrates that religion of which we now speak. —For having too much of this religion, Paul censured the Athenians. "I perceive," said he, "that in all things ye are too religions;" in the common version, "too superstitious." To say the least, then, it is talking very much at random to say that one "has got religion;" and it is a very vague address to exhort one to get religion. The term religion requires an epithet to give it any definite meaning. Hence the apostle James says, "Pure and undefiled religion (as respects the practice, for of this he speaks,) before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted by the vices in the world.” But the term religion is often used to denote a set of opinions and practices that respect a Supreme. Thus we have the Pagan religion and the Mahomedan religion. There are pious pagans and devout musselmen, in their own way. Opinions of Deity or deities, and practices addressed to Him or them, according to those opinions, constitute religion in this sense. In every religion there is a God acknowledged, and certain rights supposed to belong to Him. Those who sincerely acknowledge those rights and respect them, are called pious. From the days of the “Pius Eneas,” yea, and long before, down to a pious Turk, common opinion has so decided. In this respect all religions in the world are “the same” or similar. Mr. Maccalla might find many arguments to prove that the Pagan, the Mahomedan, and Jews’ religion are one and the same. It is true he would have to acknowledge they were not precisely the same; but, in that respect, “no two things in the world are the same.”

The affixing of one epithet to religion, if there were not another, implies two kinds at least. The epithets true, pure, sound applied to religion, imply that there may be a false religion, an impure and unsound religion. Saul of Tarsus, when a Christian, said, “You have heard of my conversation in the Jews’ religion,” and how I profiled in the Jews’ religion above many of my equals. —Gal. i. 13, 14. Now this fairly implied that he was not at the time of writing this, of the Jews’ religion; he was of another religion, a religion now called the Christian. But Mr. Maccalla would have told Paul, that his former religion and his present religion were “one and the same religion.” For “the Jewish society and the Christian society are one and the same society, or church,” because “they had the same religion!!!” Paul at another time said in the presence of a king—“after the strictest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.” But he renounced his own religion, or that of his nation, and they persecuted him for teaching another religion; fools that they were! had Mr. Maccalla being there, he would have told them he was preaching “one and the same religion!!!”

But lest we should encroach too close upon this argument for “identity” with differences attached to it, we would observe that all the human race that have entered life have been saved by virtue of the sacrifice of Christ; whether patriarchs, Jews, or Christians; whether adults, infants, or idiots. But that they all understood the nature, design, and meaning of the Messiah's death, I presume, not Mr. Maccalla himself will affirm. If this be admitted, as we know it must, on principles already stated, then it will follow that there was a very important difference betwixt the religion of patriarchs, Jews, and Christians, on a very fundamental point. Our views of the nature and design of Christ's death, affects our whole religion. But I fearlessly affirm, though this controversy does not require it, for it can he maintained on other ground; I say, I affirm that the nature and design of Christ's death, although prophesied of, and typified in the patriarchal and Jews' religion, was not understood by the Jews or patriarchs. They all, who died in faith, expected the Messiah, and anticipated glorious things in his reign, but they had no distinct apprehension of them. Nor was it necessary they should, in order to their salvation, any more than it is necessary for infants to understand the sacrifice of Christ in order to their salvation. The righteous ancients were saved by implicitly believing what God revealed to them. Thus Abraham, the father of the faithful, was justified by believing the promise, “So shall thy seed be.” Noah's faith is described by Paul as a belief that God would save him, and destroy his cotemporaries by a deluge. By faith was the harlot Rahab justified in receiving the spies in peace. By faith Moses when he was come to the years of maturity, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. For “faith,” in general terms, “is the substance of things hoped for, and the conviction of things not seen.” The Jews, to a man, expected a triumphant and victorious Saviour; they never thought of a suffering and crucified one. Hence the general infidelity of the times respecting the humble one who claimed the honour due to the Son of God. Hence the difficulty to convince his disciples that it behoved the Messiah first to suffer, and then to be glorified. The apostles themselves had no more idea of being saved by the death of the Messiah, until it was accomplished, than I now have of being saved by religious penances. The four evangelists are proof of this.
Before we affirm or deny any thing concerning religion, we must first determine what the thing is. If religion means the acknowledgment of one God, then all who have acknowledged one God have the same religion. —Jews, ancient and modern, Mahomedans and Christians, on this principle, have one and the same religion. —For these all acknowledge one God. Again, if being saved in one way constitutes religion, then patriarchs, Jews, Christians, infants whether of pagans, Mahomedans, or Christians, and idiots, if any such are saved, have all one and the same religion. For all that are saved are saved by the death of Christ. If offering to heaven prayers and thanksgivings constitute one religion, then pagans, Mahomedans, Jews, and Christians have one religion. If offering sacrifices to a Supreme Being constitutes religion, then all pagans as well as Jews have had one and the same religion.

Again, if coincidence in one, or two, or a number of religious opinions and practices, notwithstanding many differences, constitutes one and the same religion, then all religious nations and individuals, from Noah to the present day, have had one and the same religion. For all nations and individuals have agreed in one, two, or a number of religious opinions and practices, notwithstanding many differences.

But if even a belief of the same leading doctrines, and a coincidence in the same leading religious practices are all that is necessary to constitute one and the same religion, then there never were two forms of religion one and the same. No, on this principle, the Jewish and Christian religions are essentially different. One of the essential constituents of the Christian religion is, yea, the essential attribute of it is, a belief that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, the Son of God. This no man from Adam to John the Baptist believed. Now we say that he that disbelieves this New Testament fact is not a Christian; but he may be a Jew, a Mahomedan, or a pagan. For all that disbelieved it, when first proved, were debarred the Christian community. Again, a second primary essential attribute of the Christian faith is, that Jesus the Messiah made a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, gentiles as well as Jews. This, no man from Adam to John the Baptist believed; nor could they, for it was not revealed. A third, that Jesus, the Messiah, after he had made this propitiation, was buried and rose again the third day in the same body. This, no man from Adam to John the Baptist believed; nor could they, for it was not revealed. As proof of this, if it is admissible to attempt to prove that the sun shines when its beams fill our eyes, we would remark that so soon as any one believed these essential doctrines of Christianity, so soon the members of the Jewish church cast him out as an apostate from their religion. That it is one thing to expect a Messiah, and another to believe that Jesus of Nazareth is he, and not “one and the same thing,” the excommunication of all Jews from the Jewish church that believed in Jesus, by those who expected a Messiah, is a proof, a proof irrefragible.

Again, if baptizing a person in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit be necessary to the constitution of a person a disciple of Christ; or, if the celebration of the Lord's death be a practice essential to a professed Christian, none of the Jews having participated in these ordinances, from Moses to the death of the Messiah, can be considered as professing one and the same religion with Christians.

To affirm that the Jewish and Christian religions are one and the same religion, is not only a logical error, for no two things are one and the same, but it is a theological error that shocks all common sense. To say that the Jewish circumcision, altars, priests, sacrifices, oblations, tabernacle, festivals, holy days, new-moons, jubilees, tythes, lents, temples, timbrels, harps, cornets, vestedments, views, feelings, prayers, praises, &c. &c. constitute one and the same religion with Christian faith, hope, charity, baptism, and the supper, is as absurd as to say that the human body and the soul are one and the same thing, and to attempt to disprove it, by serious argument, is like to disproving flesh and spirit to be one and the same thing. To say that because they were types of the Christian religion, therefore they are one and the same, is similar to saying that because Canaan was a type of heaven, and Jerusalem a type of the heavenly city, therefore Canaan and heaven are one and the same place, therefore the Jerusalem in Canaan and the heavenly Jerusalem are one and the same city.

And to affirm, as Mr. Maccalla does, that they were different in some respects, destroys his whole argument, for if different in some respects, we then say they were different in this, that baptism and circumcision were different in their nature, manner of operation, subjects, and design, and so at last the whole argument is lost, and comes down to a controversy on this one point. For if I should admit they were similar in all other respects, but different in this, then he has lost all his pains, and is obliged to dispute this one point. So that his plan is as injudicious as his arguments are inconclusive.

In the last place on this topic, to say that they are the same in substance, helps the matter nothing; for a house, a table, a chair, may be all of wood; that is, made of the same substance. To say that the Jews' and Christian religion, because substantially the same, are one and the same, is as absurd as to say, that because a house, a table, and a chair are substantially the same, therefore a table, a chair, and a house are one and the same thing.

Mr. Maccalla argues the identity of the two churches from the circumstance of their being both called the olive tree. As he has laid so much stress on this circumstance we shall just advert to it at present. The scope and meaning of this paragraph so often attended to, and which is so fully examined in my debate with Mr. Walker, pages 27—30, beginning with the 16th verse of Rom. xi. is well given by MacKnight, in his paraphrase of the first clause of this verse. “For if the first Jewish believers have been accepted of God, the whole nation will be so when they believe.”

[On the stage we read and commented on the whole passage in MacKnight's translation, which is too tedious for insertion here: we shall give the substance at another time.]

Mr. Maccalla should remember that the Jews and gentiles now stand by faith, not by natural relationship, and this would correct his views of the whole passage.

Mr. MacCalla again resumed his notes: — “Thou standest by faith,” Mr. Campbell would have to be a refutation of my argument from Rom. xi. But if there be but one faith as well as one Lord, the Jews before Christ possessed this one faith and stood by it, as well as the Jews or gentiles since the Christian epoch. This may be safely said of all the faithful of the seed of Abraham: they stood by faith, and were saved by faith. By faith too in the great gospel facts exhibited to them in type. Mr. Campbell would represent that there have been almost as many different faiths as saints in the Old Testament. Abraham had one faith, Noah another, Enoch another, Moses another. Strange indeed! But Paul said these all died in faith: in what faith? In that faith which is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen.

But to proceed. The term vineyard is a term applied to the Jewish and Christian states of the church. In Isaiah the house of Israel is called a vineyard. “Now will I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful field: and he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a winepress therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard. What could have been done more to ray vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes? And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down: and I will lay it waste; it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns; I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.” — Is. v. 1—7. Here the house of Israel is called the vineyard of the Lord of hosts, and for their corruptions they are threatened with losing their high state of privilege. But let us hear the Redeemer of Israel on this same topic, “Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country: and when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it: and the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. Again, he sent other servants more than the first; and they did unto them likewise. But last of all he sent Unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son. But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir, come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him. When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen? They say unto him, he will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their season.”—Matt. xxi. 33—41.

Here we find the most striking proof of the identity of the two societies. —Here is one vineyard and two sets of husbandmen. The two sorts of husbandmen represent the two sorts or classes of occupants and servants that should have the rule or management of this vineyard or church. The Jewish teachers, doubtless, had the care of the vineyard, or Jewish church, and the Jewish people had the privileges of it. These were the husbandmen that defrauded the proprietor of the vineyard, and finally killed his son. He takes the vineyard from those husbandmen, those occupants of the church, he unchurches them; but the same church state he gives to others who will bring forth fruits, and will thus correspond in their lives with a visible church state. Look again at the metaphors of the parable, the vineyard, the husbandmen, the proprietor's son; the fruits or vintage, the husbandmen's killing him, the vineyard taken from them, and given to other husbandmen. See how facts accord with these metaphors. A vineyard planted, hedged, and digged; beautiful emblem of the Jewish visible church state. The husbandmen enter into the enjoyment of the vineyard; the Jews were born into these privileges: the prophets sent to them were the servants sent to demand of the people, the occupants, fruits suitable to this state. They persecuted them. They beat Jeremiah, killed Isaiah, and stoned Zechariah, son of Jehoiada in the temple. The proprietor's son, the Saviour Jesus, the heir, who was entitled to all the fruits of this vineyard, they killed him with the intention of possessing the inheritance and abusing it for their own base purposes. We all know who took the lead in the crucifixion of the Son: the chief priests and elders of the people, together with many of the nation. Again, we see the Jews turned out, the hedge torn down, the winepress demolished, the gentiles called, and thus the visible church state given to them. These facts show that the interpretation is true.
The prophecy connected with this parable has been precisely accomplished. “The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. So the fact is.” The visible church state enjoyed by the Jews has been taken from them and given to the gentiles.

The term commonwealth is virtually applied to both the Jewish and Christian societies. “Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: but now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off”, are made nigh by the blood of Christ.” Eph. ii. 11—13, The gentiles were once aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and they were once strangers from the covenants of promise. But now, in Christ Jesus, the gentiles who were once so far off from this commonwealth and those covenants, are made nigh; so much so, that the apostle adds, he, to wit, Christ, hath made both Jews and gentiles one; that is, one commonwealth: having broken down the middle wall of partition that was between them. So that with propriety it may be said that the same inspired name, commonwealth, has been appropriated to both societies.

Again, they are both called brethren, Ps. xxii. 22. “I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the congregation will I sing praises unto thee.” Now Paul, Heb. ii. 11, 12, quotes the same words, and applies them to the Christian church, thus: “I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.” And, indeed, in the next verse the Christians are called children; this same one saith, “Behold, I and the children whom God hath given me.” And the Lord, by Jeremiah, (Hi. 4.) says to the Jews, “Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, my Father, thou art the guide of my youth.” This is in effect the same as calling them children. Thus the members of the visible church under both dispensations have been called the same brethren and the same children. They are both called Zion, Is. xlix. 14—23. In this beautiful passage, observe particularly verse 20th, two classes of children are spoken of. The one class are represented as being lost to Zion, and the other class are represented as having been placed in their stead. “The children which thou shalt have, the gentiles, after thou hast lost the other, the Jews, shalt say again in thine ears (O Zion, the mother of both the one and the other) the place is too strait for me; give place to me that I may dwell.” The great increase of members to Zion from amongst the gentiles is here strikingly exhibited. Observe, however, it is the same Zion or church, who is thus addressed; and who, after the numerous accessions she receives from the calling of the gentiles, thus exclaims: “Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? And who hath brought up these? Behold I was left alone; these, where have they been? The gentiles, saith the Lord, shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.” Nothing can more clearly represent the doctrine taught in the allusion to the olive tree, and the other passages quoted from the New Testament.

Mr. Campbell read you MacKnight's translation of the passage quoted from Rom. xi. and would represent it as differing from my views, but I see nothing gained from him; fanciful as he is, he agrees with me on this topic.

On this part of the subject we shall merely state a fact, and a very forcible one. The disciples of Christ, whom he called to be his attendants, his eye and ear witnesses, and whom he afterwards called apostles, were all Jews and members of the Jewish church. In this church they continued their membership during his whole lifetime. In it they ate the Lord's supper after they had eaten the Jewish passover. After his ascension into heaven, we find them in the temple mingling with the Jews; and on the day of Pentecost they appear in the same church, acting as ministers. No man can show when or by whom they were cut off from this church. And if not, doubtless the Christian church is a mere continuation of the Jewish. We hope to resume this position in the morning.

[Thus ended the second day. Adjourned to meet next morning at ten o'clock.]

Third day. Met at eleven o'clock, in a large meeting house belonging to the Baptists, the weather having become colder. The Rev. Mr. Lyle opened the proceedings of the day with prayer. Mr. Campbell proposed to Mr. Maccalla, through the moderators, to take if necessary, two hours to finish his second argument, on condition that an equal portion of time would be allowed him to review it. The moderators referred the overture to Mr. Maccalla, who refused compliance with the measure.

Mr. Campbell then proceeded:

My friends, having proved my first position, "that a believer is the only subject of baptism," I now proceed to the second, viz. that immersion is the only baptism." Mr. Maccalla and I both agree that the element to be used in this ordinance is water. But whether the subject is to be brought to the water, or water to the subject; or whether the subject is to be immersed in water, or water sprinkled, or poured upon the subject, is the question to be controverted. The scriptures either afford us the means of determining this point, or they do not. If they do, then there is only one way of administering this ordinance acceptable unto God and profitable unto men. If they do not, it is a matter of perfect indifference, and of equal import, whether water be sprinkled upon the face, or poured into the mouth, or applied to the hands, the feet, or the whole body. If the scriptures do not determine this point, it is either because the Institutor of baptism could not, or would not determine it. If he could not determine it, it could only be in consequence of the impossibility of finding a word in the language in which he spake, of sufficient precision, of fixed meaning, of definite import, to express the action he designed to have performed. This might have been the case in some languages which are exceedingly barren. But it is admitted on all hands that the Greek language, which was the language chosen by the Founder of Christianity, in which to reveal the way of life to all nations, was the most copious and the most definite language ever spoken. The reason of this is found in the people that speak it, For the language of every people is similar to themselves. Nations uncultivated, like individuals, have but few ideas, and consequently few words. But the Greeks were the most philosophical, the most shrewd, captious, inquisitive, religious, and eloquent nation that ever existed. Forty thousand gods were acknowledged at one time in Greece. How many ideas would so many divinities acknowledged introduce! How many disputes, sects, and opinions would they give rise to!

With respect to the various uses of that, most useful element water, they had a variety of terms corresponding to those uses. The following words and their compounds were in common usage amongst the people, and indeed most of them in common usage in the Septuagint of the Old Testament, and in the Greek of the New. Raino, rantizo, cheo, echeo, nipto, louo, pluno, bapto and baptizo, agnizo, kathairo, and some others of less note. Now all these words are used with a reference to the application of water for various purposes. Some of these words express different actions, and others the same actions with regard to different objects. Now in so many words used in reference to water, is there not one of them of such definite import as to determine one particular application or use of water? This would be an unparalleled circumstance. We shall take the English Bible and its translators for evidence in this case. I have here written down three hundred and seventy-six references to the original scriptures. After a most minute investigation of every portion, from Genesis to Revelation, in the original scriptures, and the common version, I think I may safely affirm, that not one place has been overlooked.

In the Old English and New Testament the word sprinkle occurs sixty-two times. The word pour and its derivatives, one hundred and fifty-two times. To wash and its derivatives, one hundred and thirty-nine times. To dip with its derivations, twenty-two times. To plunge, once. Now the question that determines the point is, did the translators, in one instance, translate the same word to sprinkle and to dip. We positively say no. Another question may be asked as conclusive as the former, viz., Did they ever, in one instance, translate the same word as signifying to dip and to pour? We positively answer no, Bapto and baptizo are never translated either to sprinkle or to pour. Again, raino and rantizo are never once translated to dip, immerse, or plunge. This shows that, in the judgment of the translators, these words were so definitely expressive of certain actions, that they never could be translated into our language by one and the same word,. To sprinkle is one action, to dip is another action. Sprinkling and pouring are actions so nigh to each other, and in effect so much the same, that "raino" and the compounds of "cheo," are both translated "sprinkle." But so impassable the gulf between either "pouring" or "sprinkling" and "dipping," that never once is either "raino" or "cheo," "louo" or "nipto," or "pluno" translated dip, immerse, or plunge.

In the judgment, therefore, of the translators of the scriptures, our Saviour could have got a word so definite in its meaning as to express one action to the exclusion of two others at least; that is, he could have got the word "baptizo" which never was translated and never signified to "sprinkle" or to "pour," and therefore sufficiently definite for this purpose. Again, if he had fixed upon sprinkling or pouring, he could have got words that never were translated, and never signified to dip, or immerse, and thus for ever have debarred "dipping" or "immersing.

Remember, my friends, that we said, if the Saviour has not determined whether believers are to be "sprinkled" or "immersed," it must have been either because he could not from the ambiguity of that language in which he spake, or because he would not. We have shown that he could if he had pleased; if then it is not determined, it is because he would not. Let us also test this principle.

If he would not, then his wisdom and philanthropy would have led him to have found a word that could not be understood as referring to any particular use of water. He would have adopted not "cheo," lest "pouring" should be thought to be the action he intended; not "raino," lest "sprinkling" should have been practised; not "baptizo," lest "dipping" should have been supposed to be his desire; but he would have adopted a word that respected no action in particular, such as "agnizo" to purify, or "kathairo" to cleanse, in any method of applying water. The inevitable conclusion from these plain considerations and facts is, that as he did not adopt an indefinite term, he did not command an indefinite action to be performed; and as he did not use a word that definitely signified to "sprinkle" or "pour," he did not command those actions to be performed; but as he adopted a word that definitely signified to dip or immerse, he commanded definitely this action, and this only to be performed.

The term "wash," and its derivatives "washed" and "washing," are as frequently in our language, and in Greek, the name of the effect of an action performed, as they are of the action itself. Accordingly we find the word wash an ambiguous term in our language, as far as the manner of washing is regarded. The term wash and its derivatives occur one hundred and thirty-nine times in the scriptures. In our translation it is found in connexion with the hands, feet, face, body, clothes, garments, and a variety of other articles which make its occurrence frequent and indefinite. Not so however in Greek. Of these one hundred and thirty-nine times wash in English, it is nipto thirty-eight times, louo forty-nine times, pluno forty-four times, and bapto five times. So that the Greek is much more definite in the use of this term than the English. Nipto is generally applied to the hands, feet, or face; pluno to polluted clothes or garments, or other polluted substances; louo to the whole body; and of the five times which bapto is translated wash or washing, it is as the effect of dipping. Such as when Paul was commanded to be baptized or immersed, to wash away his sins--; here washing is an effect ascribed to immersion or baptism.

That Mr. Maccalla may have the fairest opportunity of detecting me, if imposing upon you false criticisms, I would inform him that I have the above mentioned three hundred and seventy-six references in this manuscript, with the words in construction with those mentioned. I will therefore lay myself completely open to detection in the following specifications.

1. Sprinkle, and its derivatives, occur sixty-two times in the Old and New Testament; thirty-one times it is raino, twenty-three times the compounds of cheo; eight times other words, but not once bapto or baptize.

2. To pour, with its derivatives, occurs one hundred and fifty-two times; ninety-four times it is cheo and its compounds; fifty-eight times other words and phrases. Of these there are twenty-seven varieties, but not once bapto or baptizo.

3. To wash occurs one hundred and thirty-nine times—eighteen times nipto, face, hands, or feet. Forty-nine times louo, the body; forty-four times pluno, garments, or such like. Five times bapto or baptizo the effect of immersion, three times cheo and chruzo metaphorically.

4. To dip occurs, with its derivatives, twenty-two times. Once it is moluno, properly to stain, as when Joseph's coal was stained, our translation, dipped in the “blood of a kid.
It is twenty-one times bapto and baptizo. Never once raino, cheo, nipto, louo, pluno, or any of their compounds, or derivatives.

5. To plunge occurs but once, and there it is bapto.

6. Tebal in the Hebrew Old Testament occurs seventeen times. In the Septuagint it is sixteen times translated by bapto or baptizo, once by moluno, to dye. Junius and Tremmelius translate it sixteen times by lingo, immergo, and demergo; and it is translated sixteen times in English by dip and plunge, once by dyed.

The result of the above investigation is briefly this, that as the Institutor of baptism selected a word the most definite in the language to express his will, and that word signifying literally to dip or immerse, his will is, that a disciple should be immersed in water, and not sprinkled with water.

If Mr. Maccalla impugns this criticism, we have a great variety of documents to present in support of it; but in the meantime shall only read a criticism or two from Drs. Campbell and MacKnight, and Father Simon, a Jesuit. Campbell and MacKnight, whom my opponent without any ceremony sent to the infernal regions, were distinguished brethren of his own church. But because they were honest men, in this instance, in acknowledging that bapto and baptizo ought to have been translated immerse, and that baptism is immersion, Mr. Maccalla would place them amongst hypocrites and unbelievers as you have heard. [Here Mr. A. Campbell read from Campbell's preface, a large extract, too long for insertion, indicative of the excellence of his character. ] The following extract from Campbell's preliminary dissertations confirms the remarks we have made:

“The word baptizein, both in sacred authors and in classical, signifies to dip, to plunge, to immerse, and was rendered by Tertullian, the oldest of the Latin fathers, tingere, the term used for dying cloth, which was by immersion. It is always construed suitably to this meaning—thus it is, enudaii, en to Jordane. But I should not lay much stress on the preposition en, which, answering to the Hebrew beth, may denote with as well in, did not the whole phraseology, in regard to this ceremony, concur in evincing the same tiling. Accordingly, the baptized are said anabainein, to arise, emerge or ascend, v. 16, apo tuo udatos—and Acts viii. 39, ek tou udatos,—from or out of the water. Let it be observed farther, that the verbs raino and rantizo used in scripture for sprinkling, are never construed in this manner. I will sprinkle you with clean water, saith God, Ezek. xxxvi. 25. or as it runs in the English Bible literally from the Hebrew: “I will sprinkle clean water upon you;” in the Septuagint—Raino eph' umas kathairon udon, and not as baptizo is always construed, Raino tunas en kathairo udali. See also, Exodus xxix, 21; Lev. vi. 27, and xvi. 14. Had baptizo been here employed in the sense of raino, “I sprinkle,” (which, as far as I know, it never is, in any use, sacred or classical,) the expression would, doubtless, have been, Ego meu baptizo eph' umas udon, or apo tou udatos, agreeable to the examples referred to. When, therefore, the Greek word baptizo, is adopted, I may say, rather than translated into modern languages, the mode of construction ought to be preserved, so far as may conduce to suggest its original import. It is to be regretted that we have so much evidence, that even good and learned men allow their judgment to be warped by the sentiments and customs of the sects which they prefer. The true partizan, of whatever denomination, always inclines to correct the diction of the Spirit by that of the party.”—Diss. Vol. iv. p. 24.

Dr. MacKnight declares, Vol. i. p. 31. “Castalio has misrepresented the meaning of scripture, in translating baptizo by lavo to wash, and baptisma by lotio, a washing.” In his notes he frequently declares that baptism is immersion, and that it ought to be so administered. —Rom. vi. 4—C, on which he remarks, “Christ submitted to be baptized—i. e. to be buried under the water by John, and to he raised out of it again, as an emblem of his future death and resurrection.” [Other extracts to the same effect were read.]

Simon the Jesuit on Matt. iii. 11, in his translation from the Vulgate, observes,” To baptize literally, signifies to dip; and to this day, throughout the east, baptism is performed no other way, according to the ancient practice of the Christians.” These three modern translators, with other Pedobaptist critics to whom we shall refer, coincide with our previous remarks. Yes, all Protestant and Catholic critics of eminence concede this point, that immersion is the proper meaning of baptism, and that it does not signify sprinkling or pouring. Our first argument in proof of the position that immersion is the only baptism, is, that the word baptism, a Greek word, literally signifies immersion only, or what is equivalent to it, dipping or sub-mersing under water. Blackstone says, that in interpreting all laws, words are to be taken literally, or in their common acceptation.

Mr. Macalla again began:

Mr. Campbell has got far a-head of me. He is already done with the subject of baptism, and has introduced the mode. We travel slowly; but I hope surely. His last address will be noticed in its proper place. I wish you to keep in mind one assertion he made in his last speech, viz. That Calvin and Beza were the first who taught that baptism was called circumcision. This we shall disprove in its proper place.

I came here, my friends, to defend the Pedobaptist world, from the charges of our opponent. In defending them from his imputations, I proposed first to give you a divine command for infant baptism. [Here was a long recapitulation of his method and progress. ] I have been lately engaged in proving that the two societies were one and the same church. First, because they had the same religion and morality. Secondly, because they had the same inspired names. For instance, they were called the same bride, house, flock, barn, floor, vineyard, kingdom, commonwealth, olive tree, brethren, treasure, Zion, and by other names equally applicable to both societies, and indicative of their identity.

I come now, in the last place under this head, to show that both societies had one and the same covenant.

A covenant is essential to a church state. A people cannot be associated into a visible form or society, but upon some grounds, or upon some associating principle, and for some proposed end. This is as true in the state as in the church. In the state there is a certain instrument adopted and recognized as formative of the social compact. This is called the constitution, in which the grand principles are asserted on which the people unite, and in subordination to which, they profess a willingness to be regulated or governed. The end proposed, if not always expressed, is always understood: it is the welfare of the people. Now a covenant bears the same relation to the church, as a constitution does to the state. Indeed we may very consistently, both with the nature of things, and also with the import of the original word translated covenant, call it the constitution of the church. As the body politic, called the state, is inseparably and essentially connected with, nay, built upon, its constitution; so the church is indissolubly and necessarily connected with, or built upon its constitution. A number of persons united under a constitution promising temporal benefits, proscribing certain rules, enforcing certain duties necessary to the present welfare of society, is called a state, a nation, or a kingdom. In like manner a number of persons under a constitution, promising spiritual benefits, prescribing certain rules, and enforcing certain duties necessary to the spiritual and eternal welfare of the society thus associated, is called the church or kingdom of Jesus Christ. Destroy the constitution and the state is destroyed; the bond of union is severed, the union is dissolved. Change the constitution and the state is changed, it is new modified, and cemented upon new principles. If, then, we change the covenant or constitution, we change the church. This is, we presume, admitted on all sides. These things premised, and it is evident that if the covenant on which the Christian society is constituted into a visible church be the same as that on which the seed of Abraham was constituted into a visible church, then the Jewish and the Christian societies having one and the same covenant, are one and the same church.

Now let us inquire what was the covenant which the church of Israel had, which constituted them a visible church of God. In ascertaining this I will unhesitatingly say, that it was not the Sinaitic covenant, for God had before that time promised to be a God to the seed of Abraham, and that they should become his people. The Sinaitic covenant we admit at once was done away, but in admitting this, we are prepared to prove that this was not the covenant which united Israel as a church. Mr. Campbell in his Debate with Mr. Walker, laboured to show that the Sinaitic covenant was done away. If Mr. Walker viewed the Sinaitic covenant as the covenant on which the Jewish church was founded, he was doubtless mistaken, and the triumph gained over him by my opponent, on that view of the matter, does not affect our argument in the least. For instance, the following passage from the Debate at Mount Pleasant, represents Mr. Walker as holding the covenant at Sinai, to be the constitution of that church. [Here Mr. Maccalla read extracts, pp. 38, 39, too long for insertion here. ]

The covenant which is done away, and with which the new covenant, is contrasted is the Sinaitic covenant. Let us hear the apostle, “But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. Fur if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be unto them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.”—Heb. viii. 6—13. Here you observe the new covenant is contrasted with that covenant made with Israel, in the time when God took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, that is, when they came to Sinai.

The apostle also, in his epistle to the Galatians, thus speaks: (iv. 22—31.) “For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not: break forth and cry, thou that traveilest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of (he freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free.” Hero the covenant at Sinai is plainly said to be done away. Observe that Hagar denotes the Sanaitic covenant, and Sarah the Abrahamic covenant. The Abrahamic covenant, being everlasting in its nature, and prior in its establishment to the Sanaitic covenant, is here fitly contrasted to a covenant that was but temporary in its nature, and subsequent to it, in its publication. The Abrahamic covenant is by Moses, Deut. v. 3, 4, plainly distinguished from the covenant at Horeb. —The latter being made with the whole nation of Israel, and the former with the father of many nations. Moses saith,” The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all here alive until this day.” The Abrahamic covenant differs not only in the allegory of the apostle from the Sinaitic, which is compared to Hagar the bondwoman; but also the apostle distinguishes them in point of date: the former being four hundred and thirty years prior to the latter. The nature and tendency of the two covenants are also contrasted by the apostle in the same passage. The former engenders liberty, the spirit and disposition of sons and heirs; the latter produces the spirit of bondage, the disposition of slaves. The blessing of all nations by a remission of their sins was promised in the Abrahamic covenant, but this greatest of blessings was not promised in the Sinaitic, consequently they are not the same covenant.

The covenant made with Abraham is then the covenant on which the Christian church is founded, and on this the Jews were constituted a peculiar people, made the people of God. The Abrahamic covenant may therefore, with the greatest propriety, be called an ecclesiastical covenant.

That this covenant still exists, and that it is an ecclesiastical covenant, is capable of the fullest proof. That it never has been abolished, might be sufficient to prove that it still exists, and if any person affirms that it is abolished, let the proof be adduced. This is indisputable; for inasmuch as it must be admitted that it once existed, it therefore must exist unless abolished. No such evidence exists.

Not only the culling of this covenant an everlasting covenant is positive proof of its perpetuity, but the very nature of the covenant demonstrates that it is perpetual. Let me ask what is the nature of a covenant? I answer, promises and requirements. These are essential to a covenant. What then were the promises of the Abrahamic covenant? I answer, in general terms, they were both temporal and spiritual. “I will be a God to thee, and thy seed after thee,” is a most comprehensive promise, including things temporal and spiritual. Jesus Christ was promised in it. “In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed.” Thus, the gospel was preached unto Abraham, the same gospel which is preached unto us. The requirements also of this covenant are invariably the same. When God promised to be a God to Abraham, it was required that he would receive the Lord as his God. When a Redeemer was promised, it was required that he would believe in him. When circumcision was enjoined upon him, that of which it was emblematical was required, viz. the circumcision of the heart. These requirements continue to exist, consequently the covenant which originated them still continues to exist. That this covenant was ecclesiastical in its very nature, appears from the fact that it necessarily separated the seed of Abraham into a church, and also even under another dispensation has necessarily formed a church not of Jews only but of gentiles. Hence Zacharias, saith Luke, i. 72, 73, that the blessings of the New Testament were a performance of the mercy promised to Abraham. His words are: “To perform the mercy promised unto our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he sware unto our father Abraham.”

Mr. Campbell then arose: —

As Mr. Maccalla is now coming to the close of the proof of his second position, and as there is some hope that this part of his argument will soon be finished, I think it inexpedient, in the mean time, to pursue the topic introduced in my last address. And having now heard the last item to be alleged by Mr. Maccalla in proof of the identity of the two churches, and this item being sufficiently detached from the preceding two, I shall just strike in with him here. He has, you see, utterly declined to be my respondent, I will therefore become his respondent, and attack him, hoping that I shall have all the privileges of a respondent granted to me. The preceding items will be adverted to in due time. As the last is quite distinct from the preceding, it affords me a proper commencement.

There is one disadvantage I wish to apprise you of, inseparable from the predicament in which I am placed. My subsequent addresses for a time must often be distributed into three parts. One part will always be a reply to the speech of my opponent immediately preceding; another part will be a review of such parts of his argument yet behind; in consequence of my having till now, as far as possible, gone on with the proof of the positions which he was obliged to impugn. I hope however soon to surmount this difficulty. The third part of my address will, as far as practicable, be devoted to the full establishment of the points yet remaining to be proved, and for the proof of which I stand pledged. I shall only add, on this occasion, that I am very much mistaken if my opponent's course in this discussion will not manifest that he was conscious in his own breast before it commenced, that he could not act the part of a respondent; that he was not able to refute the arguments to be adduced, and therefore projected this easy course of reading and commenting on the gleanings of his leisure hours; and thus, on the cheapest terms, acquire the fame of having so many days defended the Pedobaptist world.

Mr. Maccalla has asserted that the covenant or constitution of both churches is one and the same; that this covenant is the Abrahamic, and that this Abrahamic covenant was an “ecclesiastical covenant.” Circuitous and intricate are the paths of error. What a labour, what a toil to establish infant membership! The Rev. Samuel Ralston it seems borrowed this ecclesiastical covenant from Dr. John Mason, and Mr. Maccalla appears to have borrowed it from father Ralston. What a valuable acquisition! How much more are we indebted to philosophical divines for their discoveries than to that Spirit of revelation that guided the tongues and the pens of the holy apostles! The old and the new covenants were the covenants on which the apostles wrote and talked. They, poor simple and unlettered men, never used such phrases as the covenant of works, the covenant of grace, the ecclesiastical covenant. No: it was reserved to the age of reason, to unfold the covenant of works and of grace; and, to the last century, together with the urgent demands of infant sprinkling, are we indebted to this last discovery, this ecclesiastical covenant. But where this covenant may be found, my antagonist has not condescended to inform us. We shall then, as a favour, request him to specify where this covenant may he found. Is it in the xii., xv., or xvii. chapters of Genesis? Till then we must merely conjecture. In our Appendix to the Debate at Mount Pleasant we were somewhat particular in fixing the meaning of the term covenant, as used in the holy scripture. Mr. Maccalla so often as he has referred to that Debate, has not called in question the facts there stated. The term diatheke is there exhibited as signifying either appointment, constitution, covenant, or testament; and it is there proved from matter of fact, that promises and commands are called covenants. The scriptures on this subject are very plain. They speak of a plurality of covenants belonging to the Jews. There was the “covenant confirmed of God in relation to Christ” four hundred and thirty years before the giving of the law; and there was the “covenant of circumcision” twenty-four years after the former. There was the covenant at Horeb, four hundred and thirty years after the covenant confirmed of God in relation to Christ, Here are three covenants. The latter Mr. Maccalla has discarded as that covenant on which the Christian church is founded, but which of the two former is his ecclesiastical covenant, he saith not.

The law given at Sinai is called a covenant by Moses and by Paul; the two tables on which that law was written are called by Paul (Heb. ix. 4.) the tables of the covenant; and the ark in which these two tables were deposited is called the ark of the covenant. That there was a plurality of covenants made with Abraham, and therefore pertaining to his seed, Paul himself affirms, Rom. ix. 4. “Who are Israelites to whom pertaineth the adoption and the giving of the law (the covenant at Horeb) and the covenants, whose are also the fathers.” Besides, and prior to the covenant at Sinai, there was a plurality of covenants. Now if we should say there were three covenants, or only two covenants made with Abraham, it affects this question in a similar manner. If we should call the transaction mentioned in the 15th chapter of Genesis a covenant, it alters not the distinction between the covenant of God in relation to Christ, made four hundred and thirty years before the giving of the law, and the covenant of circumcision made with Abraham when ninety-nine years old. The distinguishing characteristic of the covenant Gen. xii. is the promise of blessing all nations in the seed of Abraham. And the prominent blessing mentioned in Gen. xv. and xvii. is the inheritance of Canaan and the multiplication of the posterity of Abraham. Circumcision was not attached to the promise in Gen xii. but to that in Gen xvii. twenty-four or twenty-five years afterwards. These are plain and obvious facts, we conceive unassailable. They at once prostrate in the dust my opponent’s scheme.

But there was no church constituted on the former or first covenant with Abraham; nor indeed on the second. Israel were never constituted into a church state until the covenant at Sinai, nor were the people ever called a church until that covenant was given. Now if Mr. Macalla calls the covenant recorded Gen. xii. an ecclesiastical covenant, when Paul called it the covenant of God in reference to Christ, he disparages the wisdom of the Spirit of God; and if he build the Jewish church upon it, he destroys the grand peculiarity of it, which exhibits it as bearing an equal aspect to all the families of the earth: gentiles as well as Jews. If he build his Jewish church upon the covenant recorded Gen xvii. then he cannot agree that the Christian church and Jewish church are the same; for the promises contained in that covenant belong not to the Christian church. But if he should still adhere to that covenant, we shall shew that it shared the same fate with the Sinaitic. In the mean time, that we may come to close and definite terms, let him tell us definitely, where his ecclesiastic covenant may be found.

Of Mr. Macalla’s address this is the sum: —That the covenant made with Abraham is one and undivided, though consisting of different promises will appear obvious from many testimonies of holy scripture. Deut. iv. 31. “The Lord thy God will not forget the covenant of thy fathers.” Here all the promises made to Abraham are comprised in one covenant. Indeed the same singular form of expression is not peculiar to the Old Testament, we find it in the New, (Luke i. 72.) “To remember his holy covenant, the oath which he sware to Abraham. (Acts iii. 25.) “Ye are the children of the covenant which God made with our fathers.” In these and many other passages the covenant is represented under the idea of unity. For although God often appeared to Abraham and frequently renewed, and enlarged the promises made to him, he ultimately, when he offered up his son Isaac, consolidated them into one covenant, and confirmed the whole by an oath. Circumcision was attached to this covenant as a seal and token; and (his was a confirmation of it to every one who became a subject of circumcision. For in the affixing of circumcision to this covenant there was a renewal of all the promises to Abraham, and the specifications were so definite and so comprehensive as to preclude mistake.

If we should suppose that because God appeared at sundry times to Abraham, and spake to him at every interview of these promises, he always made a distinct covenant with him, the number of covenants would be augmented to seven or eight, for he appeared to him so often. The promise of a numerous posterity was made to him seven different times; the land of Canaan four times; the promise that all nations should be blest in him was three times explicitly declared. But reason and scripture concur in viewing these as parts of one grand covenant, and this was the covenant on which the Jewish church was built. For, let me ask, what was necessary to the happiness of this people as a church that was not contained in this covenant? What greater or more comprehensive promise could there be than this: “I will be a God to thee and thy seed after thee?” This promise necessarily associated them under the wings of the Almighty, and guaranteed to them every blessing in time and to eternity. To be a God unto a people, is to be every thing desirable: protection, safety, comfort, and salvation are comprehended in it. Again, the promise of Canaan was to them literally a promise of all earthly good, and typically to the faithful among them it was a promise of heaven. For to them who believed in the promises of that covenant, heavenly things were manifested through the types; but, to the carnal and unbelieving, nothing that was spiritual either appeared or was desired. We argue, then, that from the very items specified in this covenant, and particularly from this, “In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed,” that it was an ecclesiastical covenant, embracing the covenant of grace. That it was the covenant on which Israel were constituted a visible church appears from the facts already adduced, that Abraham's seed were thenceforth called God's people and he their God, and that long before the covenant at Sinai. This covenant was also renewed with Isaac and Jacob, and exhibits in its renewal the same grand promises, Gen. xxvi. 3, 4. Things temporal and spiritual are here comprised in a few words: “Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee and will bless thee,” said God to Isaac, “for unto thee and unto thy seed I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father. And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries: And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.” Here the promise of blessing all nations in the seed of Isaac, the promise of multiplying that seed, and the promise of Canaan as their inheritance, are joined together in a few words, as parts in one transaction. Here the promise of making Abraham the father of many nations, and the promise of blessing many nations in his seed, are shewn to be of equal import.

But to show that it is not only plain from the nature of the covenant that it was ecclesiastical, but also from concurrent testimonies of scripture, we shall refer to a few: Dan. ix. 27. “Messiah shall confirm the covenant with many for one week.” This prophetic week or seven years had respect to the introduction of the Christian church, and therefore the confirmation of his covenant with many, must have respect to those multitudes that then, and for some time after the day of Pentecost, believed and were added to the church. Now observe, with these the covenant with Abraham was confirmed, not disannulled, but established; consequently both churches were established upon the same covenant.

The same truth is established in Acts iii. 25, where Peter addresses the Jews, affirming, “Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying Unto Abraham, 'and in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blest.”’ Now if this covenant, like the Sinaitic, had waxed old and had vanished away, why should the apostle here refer to it as yet standing, and exhort the Jews on this ground to turn to the Lord. This quotation of the covenant with Abraham shows, that it continued without decay, and that both Jews and Christians stood upon it as a church.

A still more striking proof that the covenant with Abraham was the covenant on which the Jews stood as a church, we have in Ex. xxxii. 12, 13, “Wherefore should the Egyptians speak, and say, for mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever.” Here Moses pleads that God would turn from his fierce wrath, not on the ground of the covenant just then made on the Mount, but on the ground of the covenant made with Abraham, and renewed with Isaac and Jacob. Doubtless, then, on the Abrahamic covenant did Israel stand, and had it not been on account of this, Israel would at that time have been consumed as a nation.

To the same effect we read 2 Kings, xiii. 22, 23, “But Hazael king of Syria oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz. And the Lord was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and had respect unto them, because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, neither cast he them from his presence as yet.” Here we see the same gracious covenant is pleaded as the reason why the Lord did not cast off Israel from his presence as yet. Not the covenant at Sinai, but the covenant with Abraham, is adduced as the reason of their continuance to exist as a church.

The covenant of grace was made between the Father and the Son. The covenant of works between God and Adam. The ecclesiastical covenant which embraces the covenant of grace was made with Abraham in relation to his natural seed, and also in relation to the gentiles. On it the Jews were formed into a church, and on the same covenant were the gentiles, when called, associated together with the Jews as a church.

Various prophetic declarations intimate the continuance of this covenant for ever, and show its inseparable connection with the church of God in every age: as, “Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people. Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.” Is. lv. 3—5. “For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant; even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off. Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh old of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people. The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him.” Isa. lvi. 4—8. “For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering: and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them. And their seed shall be known among the gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed.” Isa. lxi. 8, 9. These prophetic annunciations all proclaim the eternity of this covenant. On this subject we shall just add a few sentences, from Dr. Mason’s Essays, p. 52—54. “If the Abrahamic covenant is no longer in force, the church of God, as a visible public society, is not in any sense connected with him by covenant relation. This may weigh light with those who discard the doctrine of a visible Catholic church; but it draws much deeper than they suspect. The whole administration of the covenant of grace proceeds upon the principle that there is such a church. All the ordinances are given in it; all the promises are made to it. To the elect, as such, they are not, cannot be given. The application of them would be impossible without a special revelation:
and the whole administration of the covenant of grace, by visible means, would be at an end. Nor is a single instance to be found, excepting in virtue of immediate revelation, in which the Lord ever gave an ordinance or a promise to particular churches. They always receive their privileges in virtue of their being parts of the church universal. Now this church universal, which is the body of Christ, the temple of his Spirit, the depository of his grace, stands in no covenant relation to God, in her public character, if the covenant with Abraham is annulled. For if she does, then another covenant has been made with her. But no such covenant has been made. The new covenant which the Lord promised to make with her at the introduction of the evangelical dispensation, was to supersede, not the Abrahamic, but the Sinai covenant. It is so far from setting aside, that it implies and establishes the former; for it is promised to her as that church which was organized and perpetuated under Abraham's covenant. If, therefore, that covenant is removed, and no other has replaced it, the church, in her social capacity, is further off from God than she was under the law; and all the mercies to which, in that capacity, she once had a claim, are swept away. But this is impossible. In fact, the scriptures uniformly suppose the existence of such public federal relations; and abound with promises growing out of them. Thus speaks the prophet: “And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever.” Isa. lxi. 21, 22. Thus, my friends, in introducing the Christian dispensation, the Lord has “performed the mercy promised to the fathers, and has remembered his holy covenant.”
Mr. CAMPBELL replied: —

Mr. Maccalla has sat down without telling us where this ecclesiastical covenant may be found. He appears studiously to avoid definite and precise terms on this subject; being I presume aware how easy it would be to entangle him if he should distinctly refer to any one passage as containing this ecclesiastic covenant. It has always been the custom of those who have a good cause, and wish to be understood distinctively, to be very definite and minute in their references. If my opponent is determined to gratify me in no instance, by being definite, his respect to your edification, my friends, requires him to mention where this covenant may be found. He has, as far as possible, prevented me from exposing his sophistry, by the indistinct and confused references to scripture which you have now heard. I will, however, endeavor to bring order out of the confused mass and heterogeneous association of discordant matter thrown before you. He sometimes speaks as though there was but one covenant made with Abraham. For the sake of argument, then, let us suppose there was but one. How many promises were there in it? 1st, I will make of thee a great nation. 2nd, I will bless thee. 3rd, I will bless all the families of the earth in thy seed. 4th, Unto thy seed have I given this land from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates. 5th, I will make thee the father of many nations. 6th, I will be a God unto thee and thy seed after thee. 7th, I will make kings come out of thee. 8th, Thy seed shall possess the gate of its enemies. 9th, My covenant shall be IN YOUR FLESH, for an everlasting covenant. These are blessings or promises given to Abraham, in Gen. xii., xv., xvii., and xxii. chapters. This is the Abrahamic covenant, the ecclesiastic covenant of Mr. Maccalla. Yes: this is the covenant of the Christian church! Then the Christian church is warranted to expect all these blessings! Ill fact, they must be made to every member of it on this principle. This “covenant” was made with Abraham respecting his seed. Every member of the Christian church “stands” upon this covenant, if the whole “stands” upon it! Shall I reduce my opponent's argument to a greater absurdity? No: here let it rest.

But we have shown that there were different covenants made with Abraham, distinct in their nature, time, place, and circumstances. One was made with him, Gen. xii. when seventy-five years old, in Haran;* this was four hundred and thirty years before the covenant at Sinai. This is called by the apostle, Gal. iii. 17., The covenant confirmed concerning Christ, as MacKnight renders it. This covenant was afterwards confirmed by an oath, Gen xxii. when Abraham offered up his son upon the altar. Eight years after this covenant, Gen. xv. God "MADE A COVENANT" with Abraham in the most formal manner, concerning Canaan. Sixteen years after this time, (Gen. xvii.) he makes another covenant, called by Stephen the "covenant of circumcision." Yet you were gravely told that there was but one covenant made with Abraham; and this an ecclesiastical covenant. Yet there is no church, no ekklesia mentioned in it, nor for hundreds of years afterwards. What a daring spirit does infant sprinkling inspire! Covenants made in different countries, and at the intervals of eight, sixteen, and twenty-four years, is called one. Yea, though the apostle Paul, Eph. ii. 12. calls them the "covenants of promise," and Rom. ix. 4. calls them the "covenants" contradistinguished from the Sinaitic covenant; this daring genius of infant baptism boldly says, "PAUL, THERE IS BUT ONE COVENANT, YOU ARE MISTAKEN." Paul, you and Stephen both erred, not knowing the scriptures, you called Gen. xii. 3, the covenant "confirmed of God concerning Christ." Stephen, you erred, though full of the Holy Spirit, in calling the covenant, Gen. xvii. "the covenant of circumcision," you ought to have IDENTIFIED every thing, religion, church, covenant, name, and called this the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT, or rather, an "ecclesiastic covenant of grace!"

But, my friends, let Mr. Maccalla meet me on any one of these covenants, or on any one of these passages, telling me on which passage he rests his theory, and then you will see

* The four hundred and thirty years are thus computed: — "To the birth of Isaac, twenty-five years, Gen. xxi. 5. To the birth of Jacob, sixty years, for Isaac was sixty years old when Jacob was born, Gen. xxv. 26. Jacob went down to Egypt when one hundred and thirty, and according to the Septuagint, the Israelites sojourned in Egypt two hundred and fifteen years. For thus they translate Exod. xii. 40. Now the sojourning of the children of Israel in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan was four hundred and thirty years,— MacKnight."
how those scriptures you have heard him cite have been perverted from their proper scope and design. There is, however, as respects this controversy, nothing gained, should it be clearly proved that there is but one covenant (which indeed you must see is impossible), so long as it is confessed that there were different promises made to Abraham. And this every Pedobaptist does confess. Some of the most profound Pedobaptist commentators say that there were at least six different promises made to Abraham. At all events there were two. One respecting his natural seed, descended from his own body, and one respecting a people that were in another sense to be called his seed. This is admitted on all sides. Now that which concerned his natural seed is found in Gen. xv. and xvii. chapters. And on these covenants respecting his natural seed was the Sinaitic covenant predicated. The covenant of circumcision, and the covenant made with all Israel at Sinai, are so closely related, that circumcision is attached to the law or Sinaitic covenant, and shared the same fate with it. If Mr. Maccalla call the covenant of circumcision an ecclesiastic covenant, and at the same time says, that the Sinaitic covenant was not an ecclesiastic covenant, but was done away, he should remember that he destroys the foundation which he himself has laid, inasmuch as circumcision and the law, or Sinaitic covenant were united by the Jews, and viewed as liable to the same fate. We told him, in our last address, that we would show that the Sinaitic covenant and circumcision were viewed as alike temporary and carnal, and that they ultimately shared the same fate. Perhaps the authority of Christ will be admitted by my opponent on this topic, John vii. 22, 23. “Moses therefore gave you circumcision (not because it is of Moses but of the fathers) and ye on the sabbath day circumcise a man. If a man on the sabbath day receive circumcision that the law of Moses should not be broken, are ye angry with me,” &c. Here, then, circumcision is incorporated with the law of Moses, and the neglecting of it, or the postponing of it, is called a breach of the law of Moses. Now, as already proved, that the law of Moses is called the covenant at Sinai, we see that Mr. Maccalla's ecclesiastic covenant and the Sinaitic were incorporated together, and together were disannulled, even upon his own principles.

We have observed that if there be but two promises made to Abraham, one respecting his natural seed, and one concerning his spiritual seed, it is all that is necessary to overthrow the Pedobaptist hypothesis. Now this is admitted without controversy. His spiritual seed are all those who have obtained the same blessing of being justified by faith as Abraham was. He is therefore the father of all them that believe, though they be not of his natural seed. Now he was constituted (heir father by a gracious appointment on account of his faith; and ONE PERSON called his seed, to be descended from him, is promised to be the One Seed in whom all the families of the earth should be blessed. “If ye be Christ's (brethren or people) then,” says the apostle, we are Abraham's seed.” Believers in Christ are the ONLY SONS of Abraham in this sense. His natural descendants are his sons in the common sense of all mankind. This is a plain matter-of-fact argument; and it is all that is necessary to demolish the visionary fabric of my opponent. None but the sons of Abraham were ever interested in any covenant made with him or promise given to him. He has but two sorts of sons or children, his natural or literal descendants, of whom, we are not. Now as we are not his natural descendant, we are not concerned personally in any promise belonging unto them, as such; and, as we cannot be ranked among his faithful children until we are Christ's brethren, we are not interested in any promise made to his spiritual seed, until we are manifested to be such, by an avowal of that same kind of faith which he had. This settles the point Mr. Maccalla, and we know you cannot refute one item of it. This brings the question out of the clouds and thick darkness in which your mysterious fancy hath enveloped it, and presents it in a tangible form, to persons of the weakest faculties. Here we shall leave it until Mr. Maccalla tells us where his ecclesiastic covenant may be found.

Mr. Maccalla (for we must now look back a little) yesterday entertained you for a long time, by telling you of the different names applied to the Jewish society, and also to the Christian, as expressive of their identity; as their being equally called the house, bride, people, vineyard, kingdom, &c, of God. To all this argument we would in the mass reply. That, suppose I might be so fortunate as to have a house in Washington and one in Lexington, each of them might with the greatest propriety be called my house; the same might be said concerning barn, vineyard, floor, kingdom, &c., but who would argue thence that because they were both called my house, vineyard, barn, &c. they were one and the same house, vineyard, barn, &c.? This would shock common sense. But it may be objected that the Lord, metaphorically speaking, had but one bride, that he could not be said to have had two. To such an objection I would reply by saying that he had but one bride, one house, one vineyard, one kingdom, &c. at one time; but that Israel, having broken the marriage covenant, was divorced and ceased to be his married wife, in the metaphorical style; and that in their stead another bride was chosen, another house was built, another vineyard was planted, another kingdom was constituted, to which the same figurative names were applied. And after all that Mr. Maccalla has said on this subject, it amounts to precisely the same thing, for he will not say, with all his fortitude and zeal he cannot say, that the Jewish and Christian societies are identically the very same; no, he will say, he has said, they are under different dispensations, and this is saying a great deal, if he is aware of the import of it, for, in fact, a different dispensation is tantamount to a different covenant. At all events he makes the two societies different in some respects, and thus establishes my views, and saps the very basis of his own system.

The nature and design of the Jews' religion rightly understood, would preclude the formation of such a system as that of the Presbyterian. When God made Adam, he not only made him rational, but taught him to speak. Speech, we conceive to have been a divine revelation to the first man and woman, as much so as Christianity is to us now. We could have never known the heavenly state had it not been revealed to us, no more could Adam and Eve have conversed together had not God taught them vive voce. When Adam had progressed to a certain degree of perfection in this art, God summoned all the animals and presented them to Adam, he named them correctly. He was then dismissed from this school. Those who think that speech is natural to man, are very superficial observers of what they see passing before them, in the education of children.

The instituted signs of all the ideas requisite to man in a state of innocence, were entirely inadequate, when he became a transgressor, to afford him one idea, or to communicate any satisfactory information to his mind of spiritual and heavenly things. If it was necessary to teach him to affix signs to the objects around him, and to form significant signs of his own ideas in a state of innocence, it became infinitely more necessary to put him in possession of a new vocabulary, relative to his new and awfully reversed circumstances.

Assuming these principles, not entering into their proof at present, we proceed to observe that both the patriarchal and Jewish forms of religion were, among other things, designed to furnish the world with a vocabulary adequate to all the sublime and salutary ends, to be accomplished in the clear revelation of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, in reference to life and immortality. The first writings ever given to the world furnished just such a vocabulary. They resembled, in this respect, the elementary books put into the hands of children; full of pictures and representations calculated to engage the attention and to inform the judgment. Thus the picture of a bleeding animal, of an altar, of a priest, of a sacred edifice, and of a thousand things connected with it, open, in the first pages of the first writing, to our view, and thus imperceptibly introduce us into an acquaintance with significant signs, types, or words, adapted to give us correct ideas of the great salvation. So that the supernatural signs, types, or names, exhibited in the Jews' religion, were, owing to their fixed meaning, the best terms, in most instances, to adopt in the communication of the doctrine of life, immortality, and the Christian church. Ignorance of this, and a stupid attachment to the bare emblems, has led into false notions both of the Jews' and Christian religion. This hint carried out, and kept within the due limits assigned to it in the Bible, serves to explain one grand design of the typical church, and to set aside the major part of the remarks of Mr. Maccalla on the identity of the Jewish and Christian religion. I reserve my remarks on Gal., iv, and Heb. viii. until another place.

Mr. MACCALLA proceeds: —

What Mr. Campbell has advanced concerning the same inspired names being applied equally to the Jewish and Christian societies is nothing to the purpose. His remarks do not prove that they are not one and the same. I did not merely say that they were both called a bride, a vineyard, a kingdom, a house; but I proved that they were called the same bride, the same vineyard, the same kingdom, and the same house, the same olive tree, and the same brethren.

When I sat down I was about to proceed to obviate a difficulty that appeared to present itself, in calling the Abrahamic covenant the covenant on which the Christian church is founded, viz.: how it can with propriety be called a new covenant, if as old as Abraham. For as I have shewn that the covenant at Sinai was the old covenant, and as the Abrahamic covenant was prior to that, so it would appear that the new covenant was older than the old one.* I do not view the term new when applied to this covenant as referring to the time of its promulgation, but as referring to the clearness of the light, and the fulness of the light which it exhibits. It is owing to the brighter effulgence of grace and glory that shines in the gospel, as unfolded by the preaching of the Lord and his apostles, compared with the light that appeared in the annunciations of the holy seers of Israel under the legal dispensation, that it stands eminently new. Of the great accession of light and enlargement of privilege which would succeed the sufferings of the Messiah, Isaiah, in his lv. chapter, beautifully and impressively exhibits. In the liii. he has minutely described the suffering of Christ. And in the lv. he describes the results, in those words: —[reads from the 1st to the end of the 11th verse. ]

That the covenant made with Abraham is the covenant on which the New Testament church is constituted, will be still farther established from what the writer of the epistle to Heb. saith (chap. vi. 13—IS.) “For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could sware by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. A. id so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. For men verily sware by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end to all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his council, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to

* An objection to this effect had been made by Mr. former address.
lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us.” In this passage we have plainly cited one of the promises of the Abrahamic covenant. These promises being now confirmed by an oath, are the covenant in which Christians stand. Indeed we are informed that it was confirmed for this purpose, that we Christians might have strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us in this covenant.

We have now, my friends, come to the close of our second position, which you remember was, “that the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are one and the same church under different dispensations.” This we have proved by showing that they had

1. The same theology,
2. The same inspired names,
3. The same everlasting and immutable covenant. The two societies agreeing in the grand essentials requisite to the constitution of an ecclesiastical association, we may safely infer that they constitute but one church, one visible body of Christ. This position being proved, we now proceed to the third, viz.: That Jewish circumcision before Christ, and Christian baptism after Christ, are one and the same seal, though in different forms.

In the illustration and proof of this position we shall first attend to the nature and use of seals.

A seal and a covenant have been associated from the remotest antiquity. The ancient Hebrews wore their seals or signets sometimes in rings upon their fingers, sometimes in bracelets upon their arms. We are informed that Jezebel wrote letters to the elders of Israel to condemn Naboth, and sealed them with king Ahab’s seal (1 Kings xxi. 8). Hainan also sealed the decree of king Ahasuerus against the Jews with the king's seal. But seals are yet of much greater antiquity than the times to which we have referred. Judah, the son of Jacob, left his seal, his bracelets, and his staff, as a pledge with Tamar.

In civil contracts seals were used from time immemorial. Amongst the Jews they generally wrote two originals of every important contract; one was kept open by him especially interested in the contract: the other was sealed up and deposited in some public office. This was to prevent fraud.
Jeremiah, the prophet, bought a field in his country of Anathoth from Hananeel, he wrote the contract, called witnesses, and sealed it up, and then put it into the hands of Baruch, and said to him, “Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.” Jer. xxxii. 10—14. There are considerable varieties in the instruments with which a seal is made and the devices engraven on them. Before the time of William the conqueror, the makers of all deeds only subscribed their names, adding the sign of the cross, and a great number of witnesses; but that monarch and the nobility adopted seals with their arms on them, and others soon followed their example. The colour of the wax with, which William's grants were sealed was usually green, to signify that the act continued fresh for ever, and of force. The seals of the Turks and Arabs have neither figure nor image, but only an inscription. So the Persians, in their rings wear agates, which generally serve for a seal, on which is frequently engraved their name, and some verse from the Koran.—(Railway's Travels, Vol. i. p. 317.)

A seal is sometimes the mark of property, sometimes a confirmative mark in evidence of a contract, sometimes an emblem of secrecy, sometimes an emblem of security. It is a mark of property; thus (Rev. vii. 8.) the servants of God are represented as sealed in their foreheads, marked as the property of the Lord. It is a confirmative mark of a covenant, in evidence of its confirmation; thus Abraham received the seal of circumcision. It is an emblem of secrecy; thus the book of God's decrees concerning the church is sealed with seven seals. It is an emblem of security; thus when the devil was cast into the bottomless pit, he was shut up and a seal set upon him. It is also used figuratively as denoting mere attestation, in whatever way it is given. Thus Jesus Christ is said to be sealed by God the Father, i. e. authorized with sufficient evidence. Again, he that believeth the record that God hath given of his Son, sets to his seal that God is true, i. e. avoucheth and attesteth the (ruth or veracity of God. From this general view of a seal and its use, we select that particular meaning and use which accords with the connexion of ideas in which it is presented unto us, as affixed to the covenant. Paul called circumcision the seal of the righteousness of faith, which Abraham had whilst in uncircumcision. Indeed the apostle calls circumcision both a sign and a seal; and we know that it was attached to a covenant which was never to be done away; to a covenant that embraced the covenant of grace. Circumcision was once a seal of this gracious ecclesiastic covenant; and now that this seal is changed (not done away) into baptism, it is also a sign and seal of the same things which circumcision signified. But let us attend to the proof of this position, that baptism came in the room of circumcision; and that baptism is equivalent to circumcision; let us read Rom. iv. 11. “And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised, that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised, that righteousness might be imputed to them also.” Now observe that circumcision as a token of the covenant made with Abraham, was both a sign and seal. As a sign it imported the inward or spiritual circumcision of the heart, which is equivalent to what is elsewhere called regeneration. Hence the apostle says, circumcision, in its true design, is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter or external observance. As a seal, it was a confirmative mark, an approbatory token of the righteousness of faith, which is equivalent to the covenant of grace, this righteousness being a part of the design of that covenant. It signified to the world at large, it imported to all that considered it, that all who had cheerfully submitted to it were thereby entitled to every favour guaranteed in the covenant of which it was a seal; and in a particular manner that faith was reckoned to them for righteousness. Now let me ask, is not baptism precisely of the same import? It is both a sign and a seal. It is a sign of the washing of regeneration or the circumcision of the heart, or of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. It is a seal to all who intelligibly submit to it that they are interested in the covenant of grace, and that theirs is the righteousness of faith. It is now demonstrated that when circumcision was done away, baptism was substituted in its stead, from the similarity of their import and design. It was attached to the same covenant, and is now a sign and seal of the covenant with Abraham.

Mr. Campbell then replied: — This is the third time I ask my opponent to refer definitely to this ecclesiastical covenant, I hope he will not put me to the trouble to ask for it again. As it occupies so important a place in his theory, he ought to tell you the chapter or chapters, and verses where it may be found.

He still tells you that the same inspired names are in scripture applied to both societies, as one and the same church. That they are not only equally called the Lord's house, kingdom, vineyard, &c. but one and the same house, vineyard, and kingdom, &c. Now he has frequently declared that they are not in every respect the same, for they are under different dispensations; and why so pertinaciously insist upon the name when he has given up the thing? But I deny that they are called the same house, kingdom, &c. in any passage of scripture. This we shall prove immediately. The same names are applied to both in many respects; yet not all the same names. For the Jewish society is nowhere called the body of Christ, the church of Christ, a new man, the temple of the Holy Ghost, the pillar and the support of the truth, the kingdom of heaven, &c., &c.

Mr. Maccalla sometimes talks of the church militant and the church triumphant; now many of the same names are applied to the "church triumphant" that are applied to the "church militant," as, for instance, "kingdom of heaven," "kingdom of God," "Mount Zion," "my Father's house," or "the house of God," "Jerusalem," &c., &c. Now Mr. Maccalla might as convincingly argue that the "church triumphant" and the "church militant" are one and the same church, because they are called by the same inspired names, as that for the same reason the Jewish and Christian societies are one and the same!

Here let it be observed, once for all, that the Jewish nation stood once in a highly privileged relation to God, that he reigned over them as his people above all other people. This dignified state, this privileged relationship, (typical, it is true, of another people) was called by many names, expressive of its advantages, such as "olive tree," "kingdom of God," "house of God," "holy nation," "peculiar people," "congregation of the Lord," &c. Now, in consequence of their unbelief, rebellion, and ingratitude, they were rejected, as a nation, from this dignified state, this privileged relationship; and thus, "the kingdom of God was taken from them; “they were broken off from the good olive tree; they wore excluded the kingdom of heaven, &c., and this dignified state, this privileged relationship, was given to another people, by another covenant, that would bring forth the fruits corresponding with this state. This interpretation will be confirmed immediately in our disproving the second position of my opponent, and we know that it will bear the ordeal of the keenest critic.

Mr. Maccalla’s new covenant or testament is not new in consequence of the first being made old, but in consequence of its superior light! Marvelous light! It defies criticism! We shall leave Mr. Maccalla in the quiet enjoyment of this impregnable refuge!

Mr. Maccalla has now, at length, after so long a time, informed us that he has proved his second position. We shall have need of patience to hear nineteen more proved in a similar manner. You will no doubt, my friends, be expecting that I should now think about redeeming my pledge. I confess the time has come when it becomes my duty. What was I to do? I think this was my promise: That so soon as Mr. Maccalla had finished the second position, I would show, that in proving it to be true, he was digging a pit for his own interment; that if he proved it to be true, he would thereby confute himself. He says he has proved the Jewish and Christian societies to be one and the same society or church. Well, to redeem our pledge, we shall say he has proved it. This being admitted, we have only to remark that the infant seed of Abraham were born members of this Jewish church, and were to be circumcised because they were members of that church, not for admission into it, for they were circumcised because they were born within the covenant, as Dr. Mason and my opponent say. Well then, the infant seed of believers under the same covenant are born members of the church; consequently they are not to be baptized for admission into it, for, as they said, they are members of if as soon as born. If so then, they are not to be baptized at all, for one reason, worth a thousand, viz. —that baptism was never designed for, nor commanded to be administered to a member of the church. Except a man be born of water he could not constitutionally enter into it. But no one, recognized as a member of the Christian church was baptized from the beginning of the New Testament to the end of it,—We read of them being added to the church when baptized, but not once of any being baptized as members of the church. Mr. Maccalla then has confuted himself, and in proving the “identity of churches, covenants, and seals, he has destroyed for ever the baptism of infants. If he does not extricate himself from this pit into which he has fallen, I shall certainly consider myself as having redeemed my pledge.

The identity of churches, covenants, and seals, is an absurd identity, and ruinous to infant baptism. I preferred to save Mr. Maccalla the labour of these two days by answering one question, but his clemency would not, could not extend so very far.

You will, however, no doubt consider, my friends, that according to my promise something more is due; for I said if Mr. Maccalla proved the identity of the two churches, he was confuted on the plainest principles; and I also said if he did not, he would be confuted on his own principles. Upon the supposition, then, of his having proved his second position, we have seen he is theologically dead and buried. But now I proceed to show that he has not proved the identity of the two churches—consequently, on his own principles, confuted. Here I request you to watch me closely, as this is a point of no little moment. Perhaps some of you think that I ought to pay some attention first to his remarks on seals. No, my friends, let him first shew that baptism is called a seal, and then we shall attend to that point also. Till this is done, his remarks on seals and circumcision are as inapplicable as the tales of other times.

My first argument for affirming that the Christian religion and Christian church differ essentially from the Jewish, is drawn from Daniel ii. 44, 45, “And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, and it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. The great God has made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter.” As I delivered you an address on the rising prospects of this kingdom, on the first day of this discussion, as preparative to our present design, I shall not now be diffuse in my remarks. On this prediction we shall simply observe, first, it was pronounced in the time of the Babylonish captivity, five hundred year at least, before the consummation of the Jews' religion, while the holy nation and peculiar kingdom of God in Israel stood. Secondly, it referred to the times of the Roman empire, to the Christian era. I will just ask Mr. Maccalla, did not this prophecy relate to the Christian era? Thirdly, it is declared in the prophecy, that, in the days of the kings or emperors of Rome, the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom. Now we know that in the days of Augustus Cesar, the Messiah was born, (Luke ii. 1) and that he died under the reign of Tiberius Cesar. At all events, it is expressly declared that the God of heaven had shown what should come to pass hereafter. This kingdom of God which he would set up or constitute, under the reign of his Son, was not to commence until the last days of the Jewish kingdom. Now to constitute & kingdom, and to continue one already in existence, are as different as the building of a new house is from the repairing or keeping up of a house already built. To set up a house or to set up a kingdom is essentially different from either reforming an old one, or continuing it under new regulations. The conclusion then is plain and inevitable. The kingdom of Christ is essentially different from the nation of Israel, once the kingdom of God, as typical of this new kingdom. Confirmative of this is another prophecy of Daniel, universally understood as referring to the consummation of the Jewish state, (ix. 26, 27.) “And after threescore and two weeks shall the Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and with the abominable armies he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.” Here the desolation of Jerusalem, the destruction of the temple, the dispersion of the nation, and the consummation of their religion are as clearly spoken of, as the metaphors of prophecy will permit. The removal of the Jewish church, and the erection of the Christian, were events plainly told.

Our second argument is deduced from a notorious fact, that the four gospels, or new covenant, opens with the annunciation of the approximation of this new reign and kingdom, John the Baptist, the Messiah, the twelve apostles, the seventy disciples, to all Judea announced its approach, saying, “reform, for the reign of heaven or of the heavens approacheth.” This is proof positive that, at this time, the new kingdom was not yet set up, and that the old Jewish was yet standing. Deceitful and false were the preachings and prayers of this era for this reign to come, if it had already come; if the Jewish kingdom were all that was intended. ALL the Jews that expected the new kingdom to be a continuation of the old one, rejected the counsel of God against themselves, and perished in, and through, their mistake.

Our third reason, for asserting the essential difference betwixt the two kingdoms, is drawn from a plain and decisive declaration of the Saviour, (Luke xvi. 16.) “The law and the prophets preached until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached and every man presseth into it.” Observe, the law and the prophets contained all the old religion, end continued to teach the Jews until John preached repentance and reformation. But since John came, the new religion or kingdom of God is preached; something this, assuredly, different from the law and the prophets; else this saying was deceptive and pernicious. And, take notice, that into this kingdom all that feared God were pressing with ardour. They continued not in their former church state, under the law and the prophets; but were pressing into the new, or received the doctrine of it.

A fourth reason, for asserting this radical difference between the two religions and the two churches, is found in the terms of admission into this new kingdom. John the dipper, intimated this difference to some that applied for the baptism of reformation, who were calculating something on their relation to the old covenant, and Abraham with whom it was made. “Think not,” said he, “to say within your hearts, we have Abraham to our father—No, no, this will not do, repent, reform; the reign of God is approaching.” The day of discrimination is come; the axe and the winnowing fan are coming. The dry trees and the chaff must be consumed. Abraham's name, relationship, and covenant will protect you no longer, will entitle you to no privilege under the coming reign. God is about, from the unlikeliest materials in the world, to raise up sons and daughters unto Abraham. The days of federal holiness and birth-right membership are about being numbered with the years before the flood. Repent, I say, for if you cannot stand upon another basis than federal holiness and birth-right membership, the axe is coming. You will be cut down and cast into the fire. The Saviour also taught a dignitary of the Jewish church that, although a member and doctor of divinity in that church, unless he was born of water and of the Spirit, into the new church or kingdom of Messiah he could not enter. His membership in the Jewish church, and his fellowship in the high ecclesiastical court of Israel, would not avail any thing. No, no; Nicodemus, ye must be born again; though sprung from Abraham, ye must be born again; yes, and of water too, or into Messiah's realm you will never enter. Mr. Maccalla would tell you, you are in this kingdom already; a member of it, having the seal of the covenant of Abraham; born of circumcision, which is just as good as born of water. Mind him not Nicodemus, a greater than he saith, "ye must be born of water and of the Spirit, or into the new kingdom ye cannot come."

Mr. Maccalla rejoins: —

I think there is something like reasoning in my opponent's last address, but is misapplied. I had, I think, very clearly proved that the Jews are represented in Matt. viii. 11, 12, as being members of the kingdom of heaven or evangelical dispensation. The words are, "I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and from the west, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the sons of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." In this passage you observe it is the earthly state of the church that is spoken of, for one plain reason, that none will be cast out of the kingdom of glory. The gentiles are here represented as incorporated with the Jews, as sitting down to table with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven or gospel church. This one fact, then, certainly exhibits the Jewish and Christian religion, and churches as not essentially different, but as essentially the same. We often say that the Presbyterian church in Britain, and the Presbyterian church in America, are one and the same church, though they are under different governments, and living in different states, yet this does not destroy the identity of the Presbyterian church. The application is easy and striking.

But to return to circumcision, the seal of the ecclesiastic covenant. I suppose, if in answer to the numerous demands of my opponent respecting the place where this covenant may be found, I should tell him that it is found in Genesis, it would suffice to prevent the frequent repetition of such a question.

In his debate with Mr. Walker, p. 17. he says, that” circumcision was to Abraham what it never was nor could be to any of his posterity.” And in page 18th, he says, “that it was only provisionally a seal to any of the seed of Abraham when they received it.” Yet, in his appendix, p. 168, he represents a seal as a confirmative mark, sign, or token, which may be seen and adduced as an evidence in perpetuum rei memoriam, by which the validity of the deed, record, or transaction may be ascertained or evinced in all time coming, for the security and satisfaction of all concerned, during the stipulated continuance of the said deed or charter.” Now you see at one time circumcision is with him a fixed and confirmative mark, a seal of some stipulated blessing, and at another time it is only “a *provisional seal. What are we to expect from a writer, that with so little ceremony contradicts himself; or from a reasoner so contradictory in his conclusions. But do not both reason and Revelation authorize us to receive circumcision as a permanent and determinate mark or token;
as much so as the marks we fix upon our cattle as marks of property, which are significant and certain evidences of the relation we bear to them, and they to us.

But as I was proving when I last addressed you that baptism came in the room of circumcision, and as I was demonstrating the similarity of import and use in these seals of one and the same covenant, I will, as further explanatory and confirmatory of my remarks, read you an extract from Dr. John Mason's work already referred to in this discussion, pp. 85, 86. “But,” says the doctor, “as this conclusion may be thought too strong for the general argument preceding it, let us submit it to a more direct proof, by inquiring into the scriptural account of both circumcision and baptism. And, first, let us see how this account stands with regard to them separately. If will be seen in the following contrast: —

CIRCUMCISION

1. Was an initiatory rite, by which the circumcised were owned as of the covenanted seed, and of the disciples of Christ, and the people of God.

2. Was a seal of the righteousness of faith, Rom. iv. 11. i.e. of the justification of a sinner through the righteousness of the surety embraced by faith.

3. Was an emblem and a means of internal sanctity. The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. —Deut. xxx. 6. See also ch. x. 16.

BAPTISM

1. Is an initiatory rite, by which the baptized are numbered among members of the church of God.

2. The person is baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, (Acts ii. 38.) which is through faith in his blood; so that God is just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.

3. Is a sign and means of our sanctification, in virtue of our communion with Christ. —Buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. —Rom. vi. 4. See also 1 Pet. iii, 21.

The parallel is certainly striking: circumcision and baptism do both put a mark upon their subjects, as belonging to that society which God hath set apart for himself. They both signify and seal that wondrous change in the state of a sinner, whereby, being justified by faith, he passes from condemnation into acceptance with God; which doctrines of pardon and acceptance are exhibited in that society alone, which, under the name of his church, God hath consecrated to himself, and of which he hath appointed the circumcised and baptized to be esteemed members. Both represent, and are means of obtaining, that real purity which is effected by the spirit of Christ; and is the characteristic of all those members of his church who are justified by faith in his blood. Such a coincidence cannot be casual. It bespeaks design. And seeing that circumcision and baptism do thus substantially answer the same ends, and that the former has ceased, the only sound conclusion is, that it has been succeeded by the latter. Change of dispensation was a sufficient reason why the form of sealing the covenant dispensed should also be changed; and the points of difference between baptism and circumcision, as covenant seals, are only such as were demanded by the nature of the change: the former being much better adapted to a more extensive and spiritual dispensation than the latter. And this is an additional consideration to show that the one has been substituted in the room of the other.”

This extract, which fully expresses our views on the similarity existing between circumcision and baptism, points out three notable coincidents between these two seals.

1. They are both initiatory rites, by which the subjects are owned and acknowledged as belonging to the church.
2. They are both seals of the righteousness of faith.
3. They are both emblematical of sanctification, see Rom. vi. 4; 1 Pet. iii. 21.

Now, that an analogy so striking should exist between two seals, one of which is done away, and the one not substituted in lieu of the other, would appear very strange indeed. It is agreed by both Baptists and Pedobaptists, that circumcision is done away: on this point there is no dispute. Now as circumcision is done away, baptism has succeeded in its place, or something else has succeeded, or nothing has succeeded it. One of these conclusions is inevitable. If nothing has succeeded to circumcision, then the covenant, although in force, to which circumcision was a seal, is left with us without a seal; there are no means of applying the benefits of this covenant by a seal to those interested in it. If nothing has succeeded to circumcision, then a privilege has been taken away from the church, for which she has received no compensation. So that instead of an enlargement of privilege under the evangelical dispensation, there is a diminution of privilege. If any ordinance has succeeded to circumcision, let us hear what it is. Baptists have never told us of any. Then it is not succeeded by any ordinance other than baptism. The only conclusion then tenable and obvious, is, that baptism has succeeded to circumcision, and this in fact is conceded by some Baptists. See Booth's Apology, p. 143, as quoted by Pond, p. 103. “It is always urged by those Baptists who advocate close communion, that unbaptized persons should be prohibited the Lord's table, because uncircumcised persons were prohibited the passover.” If this argument has any force, it implies the substitution of baptism in the place of circumcision. The Baptists, then, in their reasonings upon other subjects, are constrained to admit the principle for which we contend. We are very sure that the influence of system often prevents many from saying as well as seeing the truth. This may be unintentional. But when the favourite points are out of view, then we may expect a fairer exhibition of truth. Thus, in the present instance, though Booth was a violent Baptist, he not having his darling topic in view, gives us a fair opportunity of seeing how inconsistent his views were; at one time making baptism a substitute for circumcision, and at another denying it.

In reply to which Mr. Campbell spoke: — Mr. Maccalla appears as reluctant to defend his favourite position of the identity of the two churches as he was to reply to me. When I have become his respondent, and attacked those bulwarks he has fortified in his rear, reason suggests that he ought to defend them, if defensible, from demolition. But all the defence last made of the capital position, is, a reference to the gentiles coming from the east and west, and sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven; while the sons of the kingdom are cast out. By the “kingdom of heaven,” he would understand the Christian church, and by “the kingdom,” he understands the same. Now let us test the principle, by reading the substitute for the principal. Many shall come from the east and from the west, and shall sit down in the Christian church with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but the sons of the Christian church shall be cast out into outer darkness! &c. The absurdity, I presume, is apparent to all. The kingdom of heaven, and the kingdom, do not refer to the same state. They do express the full sense of the explanation I have already given. The favourite hypothesis of Mr. Maccalla, then, evidently fails in one important respect, viz. in having no scripture proof. But recollect, my friends, he has not made one struggle to get out of the pit into which he has fallen. He is buried under the ruins of one of his bulwarks. Better try to get out of the present catastrophe than to add to the mass of materials already too heavy to bear.

But the seal of the covenant is now his darling topic. He argues the covenant (which we are now politely and minutely informed is somewhere in Genesis!) is unchangeable, but the seal has been changed. This is assuredly a “\textit{rara avis in terris.}” A perpetual covenant with a temporary seal! An \textit{unchangeable} covenant with a changeable seal! This is a Phoenix covenant without a mate in all the creation. It renews its existence by death! The bloody seal is now changed into water. Can there be produced a parallel in things temporal, spiritual, or eternal for such a covenant! A covenant oral or written, perpetual and unchangeable, having its seal at one time in the circumcision of the flesh of a human being, at another time having its seal in a few drops of water on the nose or eyebrows. Transubstantiation is plainer than this!

Must I review an argument, and by serious argumentation too, unlike to any thing in the universe? Let us have one archetype; we ask for only one of a covenant remaining when the seal was taken away! Was not circumcision significant of something; could it not \textit{be seen} and \textit{examined} by every body; and what did it say? It said, \textit{“I am a Jew, of the seed of Abraham, entitled to every thing promised my father, when God told him to make this mark upon me.”} Deface this mark in the flesh, and sprinkle a few drops of water upon the face, and then say, it is the \textit{same seal}, significant of the same thing: that is, this watery seal can be \textit{seen} on the flesh, \textit{examined} by every body, and says, what? just what circumcision said, \textit{“I am a Jew, of the seed of Abraham, entitled to every thing promised my father, when God told him to make this mark upon me:”} It surely lies, if it tell such a tale.

A seal, Mr. Maccalla says, is a \textit{confirmative mark}. Now who ever thought that water left a confirmative mark on the forehead of a child. But remember, my friends, I called upon my opponent to tell us where baptism is called a seal. Nowhere, I say, in the Bible. To presume that baptism is a seal, and to presume that it is substituted in the place of circumcision, and that the seal is changed, is taking too much liberty in an argument. One presumption might, in some cases, be tolerated, but it is too presumptuous to demand three, nay, to adopt them without any ceremony, and place them as the basis of an argument.

I deny that circumcision was ever changed into any thing; that baptism is a \textit{seal} of any covenant in the legitimate use of language; and, consequently, that baptism came in the room of circumcision. And I positively say that Mr. Mac-calla cannot produce one text in the Bible in proof of the contrary. I say again, it is quite too presumptuous to presume so far, as to take three suppositions as facts acknowledged, and place them as the foundation of an important part of the system.

But there is an analogy betwixt circumcision and baptism. This is pleaded by the Pedobaptists. Suppose we should grant them this analogy, what then? There is an analogy between Adam and Christ in many points; between Adam and Noah; between Hagar and the old covenant; between Ishmael and the Jews; between Jonah in the whale's belly and Christ in the grave; and a thousand other things in scripture, and shall we say that the one came in the room of the other, and is a substitute in its stead!

And after all that has been said of circumcision as a seal, it is only called a seal once, and in relation to one circumstance in the life of one individual. It never was a seal to one of Adam's race, in the same sense, and for the same purpose, as it was to Abraham. Mark the apostle's style: He received the sign of circumcision, this was its common import to all the Jews—he received the sign, its common name; to him in particular a seal; of what? of his interest in the covenant; no: this he had guaranteed by the veracity of God. A seal of what? of the righteousness of that faith; what faith? of the faith which he should afterwards have? No, no: but the faith he had—when? SIXTEEN years before this time; when his faith was counted unto him for righteousness; and TWENTY-FOUR years before this time he believed the promise of God, and left his own country and his father's house, in the obedience of faith. The whole mystery desolves at the touch of common sense, when it is simply known that Abraham received the usual sign of circumcision, which to him was a pledge or mark of the divine acceptance of his faith. We challenge Mr. Maccalla to the fourth of the Romans: if he can prove any thing else from it, by the most rigid criticism, we will give up to him the whole argument. Do, Mr. Maccalla, meet me on this topic, if you please. The terms are easy.

But he found a contradiction in the debate at Mount Pleasant—eagle-eyed and far-sighted critic! In this instance, however, he has not looked through a proper medium. He has been often alluding to that debate, and yet he has not found a flaw in it. He found the phrase, "provisional seal," and this he could not reconcile with its being a confirmative mark. We shall help him to understand this term provisionally. If he had read the next sentence, p. 18, the whole difficulty would have vanished. I: reads thus: "Circumcision did not positively secure to all the circumcised even this (that they should inherit Canaan), but only provisionally, for many of them might die the day after they were circumcised, and never inherit any of its temporal blessings; besides, many of them might live and break that covenant, and therefore, forfeit the enjoyment of its blessings: and many of them did so. So that it was only provisionally a seal to any of the children of Abraham when they received it. This read, and like the ghosts of Ossian, Mr. Maccalla's discovered contradiction vanishes.

He gave you a quotation from Dr. John Mason. We shall treat you to another. This unfolds the golden reason for advocating infant baptism. O how conclusive his reasons! hear him plead the cause of a mixed church. To which infant sprinkling mightily conduces; his words are, p. 156—159, "The mixed character of the church contributes directly to her prosperity. It does so,

- By extending her resources,
- By increasing her numbers,
- By affording protection.

First, The resources of the church, we mean her outward resources, are extended by her present constitution. These, in general, are pecuniary aid and the aid of talents.

It is evident, that alt those means by which the gospel is supported and propagated, are not furnished by real Christians; and equally evident that the whole supply is very scanty. If you should deduct the part which comes from the pockets of unconverted men, the balance would not preserve Christianity from being starved out of the world. Indeed from the wretched provision which is commonly made for her maintenance, one might conclude, with little offence against charity, that the great majority of professed Christians, are not unwilling to try how far this experiment of starving may prove successful. That is their sin, and it shall be their punishment. Let them think of it in those moments when they recollect that they are as accountable for the use of their property, as for the use of their liberty; and that there is to be a day of reckoning in which no robbers shall appear to less advantage, or be treated with less indulgence, than those, who, in this life, have “robbed God.”

But small as the encouragement is for any, who, by following another honest calling, can procure a tolerable livelihood, and lay up even a little for their families, to devote themselves to the religious welfare of society, it would be much smaller were none to be accounted Christians here, who shall not be accounted such hereafter. Go, with the power of detecting hypocrisy; cast out of the church all whose fellowship is not “with the Father, and with the Son, Jesus Christ,” and your next step must be to nail up the doors of our places of worship. We are in the habit of praying that the Lord, who has declared that “the silver is his, and the gold is his,” would influence the hearts of the opulent to bring their offerings to his courts. We thank him, when, in a manner somewhat uncommon, he hears our prayers, and sends the bounty; and yet we overlook the daily occurrence of this very thing which is the object of our petitions and of our gratitude. He has incorporated the principle in the frame of his visible church, and it operates with regular, though silent efficacy. But if all who appear to be Christians, and are not, were excluded, the effect must be to diminish, in a most distressing degree, the actual pecuniary resources of the church.
For men who are marked as enemies, will never lend her the same aid as men who are supposed to be friends. And thus the absolute purification of the church upon earth would overthrow the plan which the wisdom of God has devised, to cause his very foes to assess their own purses in carrying on that dispensation of grace which, at heart, they do not love; and which, if left to themselves, they would resist with all their might.

Observe first: The baptism of infants affords much more revenue to the church than the baptism of believers. What comes from “the pockets of those baptized infidels is what keeps Christianity from being starved out of the world!” What hireling priest would not contend for infant baptism as for his “heart's blood!”
Indeed, all who do not contribute liberally of their money to the infant sprinklers are “robbers of God!” Poor as the revenues of these doctors are, it is affirmed by this doctor, it would be much poorer were it not for infant baptism. Honest confession! Few priests would be so honest as the doctor, to make so explicit an avowal of the grand motives for urging infant baptism. “The Lord,” he says, “hears the prayers of the church for giving her silver and gold, and he sends it to the church by the silent efficacy of infant baptism. And, indeed, “the absolute purification of the church,” says he, (the rejection of infant baptism, one great and principal means of), “would overthrow the plan which the wisdom of God has devised, (a grand part of which is to have infants sprinkled) to cause his very foes (baptized infidels) to assess their own purses, in carrying on that dispensation of grace (to the clergy) which at heart they do not love, and which, if left to themselves, (without being honoured with a place in the church) they would resist with all their might!” So, so, then; this modern scribe joins with the Jewish scribes, in telling the Messiah, “Thou castest out devils by Beelzebub the prince of the devils.” Thou bringest under tribute those possessed of an evil spirit, that by means of their agency thou mayest cast the evil spirit out of others!! Infant sprinkling! what a powerful engine thou art! Thou enrichest the priest, preventest Christianity from being starved out of the world, and convertest the sons of Belial into true sons of the church! Mute be the tongue, and palsied the arm, that would not unite exertion in support of thee!

But Mr. Booth conceded that baptism came in room of circumcision; Mr. Pond says so, and Mr. Maccalla agrees with him. Sagacious critics! Mr. Booth tells Pedobaptists that, on their principles, unbaptized persons cannot be admitted to the supper; for, on their hypothesis, uncircumcised persons did not eat the passover. Thus I understand Mr. Boot; and sorely pressed for argument must that genius be, who can extract from his words any thing else. But I came not hither to defend Mr. Booth, I came to defend the truth.

Having now circumstantially noticed every item of Mr. Maccalla's last address, I proceed to offer another evidence subversive of Mr. Maccalla's doctrine of identity. It is found in the Saviour's address to Simon Peter, Matt. xvi. 18. “Upon this rock,” said the Saviour, “this truth concerning me, which you, Simon, have confessed, I will build my church, and the gates of hades will not prevail against it.” This church, then, was not the Jewish, for that was built long ago. The building of Christ's church—my church, said he, is yet future—I will build it, the foundation will be laid on this truth concerning me. This truth was fully established in his death and resurrection; and then the building commenced. To build a church, and to repair one, are actions so different, that babes and sucklings can distinguish them. Mr. Maccalla's theory is subverted upon this evidence alone, if there were no other proof of its falsity. Remember, my friends, that the Messiah came to build a new church, and not to repair an old one.

Mr. MACCALLA then rose: —

I know not whether it will be expected or necessary for me to reply to Mr. Campbell's remarks upon the quotation from Dr. Mason. You would think from the remarks that have been made, that the Doctor's sole object in defending infant baptism was the love of money. What a contemptible figure does the Doctor exhibit viewed through the light of the preceding drubbing that my opponent has given him! Who would appear in the defence of such a man! Or who would vindicate his sentiments on any topic! a man so much under the influence of the love of mammon as to model the church into what form would contribute most to the enriching of himself! Yet, notwithstanding this terrible lampooning, has the Doctor in the smallest degree overstepped the bounds of truth? Has he said any thing more than what is promised or foretold in the New Testament? Is it not there said that the earth helped the woman? Now what does this mean but that the children of this world do help the church of God? By the earth, is commonly understood the men of this world who are unregenerated. By the woman, the church is meant. Now the former helped the latter — how? but by contributing to her resources, just as the Doctor has said. Shall I foul my hands by replying to such arguments; no: enough of such trash.

I resume the argument in which I was engaged in my last address, viz. that circumcision and baptism are seals of the same covenant, and that the latter is substituted instead of the former.

Mr. Campbell reviles the idea of a change of seals, but may not the form of any thing undergo a change while the substance continues the same? Upon his principles the forms of dispensation through which the covent of grace has passed, must have changed the substance of it; for it is evident it has passed through different forms. But as that same Dr. Mason, whom you have heard so reviled, has very ably removed this objection, we shall read you an extract from the work already referred to, p. 78—81. “The substance of the ordinance, that which properly constituted the seal, was the certification to the person sealed, of his interest in God's covenant. The rite of circumcision was no more than the form in which the seal was applied: These two things must not be confounded. For, on one hand, the rite may be, and was, and is yet, performed without any sealing whatever. The sons of Ishmael were circumcised, but they belonged not to the covenanted seed, and therefore circumcision sealed nothing to them. The Jews are circumcised still, but being cut off from the olive tree, being cast out of the church of God, and suspended from the privileges of the covenanted seed, their circumcision is nothing. On the other hand, the seal had been the same, although administered by a different rite. The amputation of a toe, the perforation of an ear, the sprinkling of blood, or the anointing with oil, would have answered the purpose as well as circumcision. The essence of the seal lying not in the rite, but in the divine sanction which is given by that rite to claims on God's covenant. Now as it is self-evident that this sanction may be conveyed under any form which he shall please to prescribe, it is a gross error in reasoning to conclude, that because the ancient form is laid aside, therefore the seal and all things certified by it are laid aside too. It would be quite as accurate to infer, that because the form of church polity is altered, therefore the church no longer exists. If it be objected, that “however distinguishable the seal and the sealing rite be from each other in theory, they are inseparable in fact; as the former cannot be applied to us but through the medium of the latter; and therefore if this be abolished, the other is to us as if it did not exist;” I reply, that the objection concludes equally against the existence of a church upon earth; for it must appear in some visible form, or else, to us, it is no church: and the argument is still good, that if the abolition of a particular form, of sealing God's covenant involves the abolition of the seal itself, then the abolition of a particular form of his church involves the abolition of the church itself. The objection assumes the very point in debate, viz. that the seal of the covenant, and a particular form of the sealing rite, are coexistent, and perish together. Whereas, it is contended, that the cessation of the latter does by no means imply the cessation of the former; but that the seal may remain the same, although the rite be changed, and may pass in its full virtue and efficacy through successive forms of application. In truth, it is a fundamental principle, that forms of dispensation do not affect the substance of things dispensed. Otherwise, the covenant of grace has been changed often. But if Jive forms of dispensation have not touched the substance of the covenant of grace, nor three forms of dispensation the substance of the covenant with Abraham, why should the disuse of a particular mode of sealing this latter draw after it the destruction of the seal itself? and of all the relations and benefits sealed? The issue is, that circumcision may be laid aside without infringing upon the covenant to which it was appended. It has been laid aside, and the question is, What has been substituted in its place? As none of the parties to this controversy pretend that it has been succeeded by any other ordinance than baptism, the only alternative is, either that nothing at all has been substituted for it, or else that the substitute is baptism.” This clearly establishes the point we have in view, viz, “that the rite of circumcision was no more than the form in which the seal was applied;” consequently, the rite may be changed, the form of sealing altered, but the substance is the same.

I come now to show that baptism is actually called the Christian circumcision, Col. ii. 12. “Ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ; buried with him in baptism.” Now the phrase, the circumcision of Christ, is an hebraism, similar to the Christian circumcision, which is in the next words defined to be baptism. The scope and import of the whole passage is, Ye Colossians are all circumcised being baptized, for baptism is the Christian circumcision. This important evidence of the similarity of the import and design of circumcision and baptism is well argued by Dr. Mason, p. 89—92, “This is a very extensive proposition, made up of a number of subordinate ones which it is necessary distinctly to weigh.
1st. Both circumcision and baptism are to be viewed as signs of spiritual mercies. It is for this reason alone, that they are or can be employed as terms to convey the idea of such mercies.

2nd. Circumcision was a sign of regeneration and of communion with Christ, as the fountain of spiritual life. The apostle is treating of a believer's completeness in Christ—of circumcision in Christ. That his meaning might not be mistaken, he explains himself of the inward grace, calling it “the circumcision made without hands,” and to cut off all misconception, he explains his explanation, declaring this “circumcision without hands” to be the putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ.

3rd. Baptism, too, is a sign of regeneration, and of communion with Christ, as the fountain of spiritual life.

In baptism, saith Paul, ye are “buried with Christ, ‘ ’ye are risen with him, ' through a divine faith, “the faith of the operation of God.” Whereas ye were “dead in sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh,” (uncircumcision put for the state irregeneracy,) God hath quickened you together with Christ.

Collect now the result. A believer's sanctification, in virtue of union with Christ, Paul declares to be represented by both circumcision and baptism: for he expresses his doctrine by these terms indifferently; and annexes to them both the same spiritual signification. He has, therefore, identified the two ordinances: and thus, by demonstrating that they have one and the same use and meaning, he has exhibited to our view the very same seal of God's covenant under the forms of circumcision and baptism respectively. But as the same thing cannot subsist in different forms at the same time: and as the first form, viz. circumcision, is laid aside, it follows that the seal of God's covenant is perpetuated under the second form, viz. baptism: and that it signifies and seals in a manner suited to the evangelical dispensation, whatever was previously signified and sealed by the rite of circumcision.

If we again inspect the apostle's proposition, we shall find that he directs us to this conclusion, as well by the structure of his phraseology, as by the force of his argument. For, on the one hand, by the indiscriminate use of the terms circumcision and baptism, he appears to assume, as an indisputable fact, the substitution of the latter in place of the former; nor is it easy to conceive why he should discourse in this allusive manner, if the exchange were not perfectly understood among Christians: and, on the other hand, his language is so framed as to assert that exchange. “Circumcised—in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ; buried with him in baptism.” What can the apostle intend by the “circumcision of Christ?” Doubtless not the literal rite; for this would destroy at once the whole of his reasoning on the article of sanctification, in the same way as it is destroyed by those who interpret the phrase, “buried with him in baptism,” of submersion of the body in the act of baptizing. The apostle cannot so trifle. By the “circumcision of Christ,” he means that righteousness of faith, that mortification of sin, that quickening influence, which flow from Christ, and were signified by circumcision. But that same righteousness of faith, and mortification of sin, and quickening influence, are also signified by baptism. But circumcision and baptism are external signs, which the apostle recognizes by specifying the things signified. In his transition from the one to the other, that is, from circumcision to baptism, as signifying, in their respective places, the very same blessings, he points to the transition which the church of God has made in fact, from the use of the former to the use of the latter. “With regard to the things signified,” saith he, “there is no difference. The circumcision of Christ, and burial with him in baptism, are expressions of similar import; both declaring a believer's communion with him in his covenant-mercies. With regard to the outward sign, fellowship with Christ in his death and resurrection, is represented in baptism as putting off the body of “the sins of the flesh,” was formerly represented in circumcision.” If this be just, the inference is plain. Baptism is the Christian circumcision; the sign of baptism is the Christian form of sealing God's covenant, and, as such, has taken the place of circumcision.

There are a number of objections to this doctrine we own, but what doctrine is there to which there are not some objections. It has been objected to this doctrine, that if baptism came in the room of circumcision, that, doubtless, it would have been mentioned in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of Apostles, as the apostles were on that occasion speaking on the subject of circumcision, and not particularly on the point necessarily requiring them to be explicit in informing the people of the change of circumcision into baptism, had this been the fact. But to argue from the silence of scripture on any subject is not a correct way of reasoning. There might have been many reasons for passing the matter by in silence on that occasion. Besides the members of the synod at Jerusalem, if not in the synod, they did elsewhere express their views of this point. And as some of them have called baptism the Christian circumcision, and have explained its import as equivalent to that of circumcision, the point is satisfactorily settled, although the synod of Jerusalem have passed it over in silence. And suppose we could assign no reason for the silence of the synod of Jerusalem, it affords no evidence of these two ordinances being different in their import and use.

There are in the volume of redemption, as well as in the volume of nature, many inexplicable things. I suppose my opponent will admit that there are even many words in the Bible, the precise ideas attached to which he could not ascertain. At least we are assured that some as wise as he have confessed their inability. Can he explain to us satisfactorily what is meant by Selah—Urim and Thummim—Leviathan—the Unicorn. I know some conjecture may be given, but can he determine with certainty their import? I think not. I think it would be as difficult for him to do this, as to explain why large pumpkins grow on slender vines, and small acorns on mighty oaks, and a thousand other things as inexplicable.

I would therefore conclude that there may be many things connected with any lawful practice, which things we may not be able to explain satisfactorily, yet such things should form no real nor formidable objection to a practice otherwise plain and commendable. Though there are many things in the dark connected with the changing of ordinances, such as the substitution of the sacrament of the supper in room of the passover, the substitution of the sacrament of baptism in room of circumcision, the substitution of the first day of the week in room of the seventh day, sabbath, yet we are assured of the fact that such has been the change, and that by divine authority too.

vocating a mixed church on the hypothesis that it is a fulfilment of ancient prophecy, which saith, “That the earth helped the woman.” This will not justify any attempt to make the earth help the woman. As correctly might Christianity be established by civil law, and every citizen compelled to support the church on this principle, that the earth was to help the woman, as to recommend the baptism of infants for this purpose. But it is all a forced interpretation of a plain prophetic oracle, for a pretext to justify an unwarrantable practice. It is generally understood by the ablest interpreters of prophecy, to refer to the establishment of such forms of civil government as that of the United States; or to such an improvement in monarchical governments as in England; as would preclude persecution for conscience’ sake. In this way, indeed, the men of this world, philosophers and statesmen, civilian and legislators, have shielded the true professors of the Christian religion from the flood of persecution which tyrannical governors, infuriated by blinded, bigoted, blood thirsty priests, have issued forth against the disciples of the primitive faith.

To what was it owing, my fellow citizens, that we have a constitution so favourable to the utmost liberty of conscience, so congenial to that” spirit of inquiry which is essential to our knowing and enjoying the true substantial bliss; a constitution the wonder and the admiration of the virtuous—the fear and the dread of the tyrant and the oppressor in all nations; a constitution, the brightest ornament, the most illustrious feature of which is, that benign aspect which it bears— that humane spirit which inbreathes, that generous philanthropy which it expresses in these golden words—“Ml men are born free,”—free to worship THE ALMIGHTY, according to the dictates of their own consciences. I say, to whom is this owing? To clergymen? No: to them we are indebted for persecution. To religious zealots? No. To whom then? Under the Almighty to the spirit of scepticism? Yes; He brings good out of evil. I am persuaded that it was owing more to the scepticism that prevailed in that most illustrious of all national conventions, that which framed this Magna Charta of American liberty, than to any cause. Had sectarian priests framed our constitution, DO you think that I, my friends, dare have stood here, as I do this day, in opposition to the very principle which is the basis of all religious establishments? No, my friends, there would then have been a more summary way of settling such controversies.

But to circumcision once more. —Mr. Maccalla has read you another extract from Dr. Mason, in vindication of that most singular of all principles; the changing of a seal while the covenant remains unchanged. Why, in the name of common sense, change the seal? Circumcision is as suitable yet as ever it was, if the covenant be the same. But how does the Doctor explain this mystery? By telling us “that the rite of circumcision was no more than the form in which the seal was applied.” What sophistry! What disregard to common sense! What an insult to the human understanding! The rite of circumcision. What was that? the making of a mark in the flesh. The rite was the form of the seal! The making of the mark, was the mark of the “confirmative mark!!” When the varnish is washed off this sophistry, such is its meaning—such is its naked deformity. The rite of circumcision was circumcision itself, according to every body's view of rites. The form of circumcision was the form of the rite. Take away the form of a mark or of a sea), and then show it to us. It is invisible. Hence the whole distinction is absurd.

But Mr. Maccalla has proved that baptism is Christian circumcision. From Col. ii. we shall read from the 8th to the 12th verse. Now see the apostle's design. He first exhorts the Colossians to beware of such philosophy as that of Pedobaptism, i. e. after the tradition of men after the rudiments of the world. He asserts that these believing gentiles were complete in Christ, without either pagan or Jewish appendages. This completeness he particularizes in certain instances. Ye gentiles have no need of the Jewish circumcision. Why? Because ye have received a more excellent circumcision. What was that? baptism? No: but a circumcision made without hands, viz. “the putting off of the body of the sins of the flesh.” So the apostle explains it. This is similar to Paul's argument, Rom. vi. 6. “Our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed.” The circumcision made without hands is, then, the putting off the whole body of the sins of the flesh. And this circumcision Christ is said in the first clause of the eleventh verse to have performed: “By whom also you have been circumcised.”—(MacKnight.) The last clause terms it the circumcision of Christ, because performed by him, and because it is the only circumcision required by him. But the apostle adds to this circumcision their baptism or burial. Not only the putting off of the sins of the flesh, but also their death and burial as respects sin, exhibited in baptism, is presented as another proof of their completeness in Christ. So that instead of making baptism Christian circumcision, the apostle makes the putting off of the body of the sins of the flesh the Christian circumcision. And this is the circumcision performed by no hands; it is a circumcision by the power of Christ. Let Mr. Maccalla meet us on this passage, as we have proposed to meet him on many others: we will rest the whole controversy on this point. If he establishes his views by a fair criticism on this passage, although it would not affect the main topics of discussion, yet we would cheerfully say that he had gained the victory. We are prepared to enter much farther into the investigation of it.

My opponent was ingeniously preparing the way of his retreat from the difficulties he saw coming upon his substitute for circumcision, by informing us that many inexplicable difficulties being attached to any opinion, must not constitute an objection to it. This he enforced by asking us some very hard questions. Upon this principle he proceeds; we must admit that there was an animal called leviathan; another called the unicorn; but it is presumed that we cannot answer every question that he could propose relative to these animals. Just so, he maintains that baptism was substituted for circumcision, but it is presumed many questions may be asked, relative to this substitution, which he cannot answer. But his not being able to answer such questions must not be considered an objection to his doctrine; no more than our not being able to tell why large pumpkins grow on slender vines, and small acorns on mighty oaks, disproves the fact.*

Notwithstanding this ingenious fortress, prudently erected by Mr. Maccalla, we must propose a few difficulties attached to his theory, which we do not suppose entitled to that exemption from solution, with which those difficulties

* A philosopher said that evening, that he could have removed the difficulty about the pumpkins and acorns on this principle: that if pumpkins grew on oak trees, the falling of them would Mil the hogs.
he has introduced might, perhaps, in some cases, be indulged. They are the following:

1. Circumcision was administered to males only: its substitute then should be confined to males only.

2. Circumcision required not faith in its subjects. Baptism therefore ought not to require faith in its subject.

3. Circumcision was administered according to law on the eighth day. Its substitute then should be administered on the eighth day.

4. Circumcision was administered by parents, not by priests ex officio. Baptism, its substitute, ought likewise to be administered by parents, not by priests or clergy, ex officio.

5. Circumcision was a mark made upon, not the face of the subject. Baptism, its substitute, ought not to be performed on the face.

6. Circumcision was not a duty binding upon the child, but upon the parents; it was an act of the parent, the subject was passive. Baptism, therefore, is not a duty of the subject, but of the parent: it is the parent's act, the subject is passive.

7. Circumcision was administered to all a man's slaves, all born in his house and bought with his money. Baptism, therefore, ought to be administered to all the slaves of a householder, as well as to his own seed.

8. Circumcision required no piety in the parent to entitle his child to this ordinance; neither faith nor piety were ever required of a parent to entitle his child to circumcision. Piety or faith ought not then to be demanded as necessary in parents to the baptism of their children.

9. Circumcision imported that its subject was entitled to all the promises made to Abraham concerning his natural seed. Baptism, its substitute, therefore, imports that its subject is entitled to a share in all the temporal blessings promised to the seed of Abraham.

10. Circumcision was a token or sign in the flesh of the covenant made in the seventeenth chapter of Genesis; baptism is, therefore, a token, or sign in the flesh, of the covenant made with Abraham in the seventeenth chapter of Genesis.

11. Circumcision was not to be performed in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Baptism, its substitute, is, therefore, not to be performed in these names.
12. Circumcision was identified with the law of Moses, (John vii. 23.) and shared the same fate. Baptism is, therefore, 'identified with the law of Moses, and must share the same fate.

13. Circumcision has come to such a crisis, that whosoever is circumcised, Christ shall profit him nothing; therefore baptism, its substitute, will also come, or has now come, to such a crisis, that whosoever is baptized, Christ shall profit him nothing.

14. Circumcision did not exempt one of the Jews from baptism, when they believed in Christ; therefore its substitute, baptism, ought not to exempt a believer from being baptized again and again.*

Here are a few differences between circumcision and baptism which it will be as hard to remove, on satisfactory principles, as to account for the prodigies mentioned by Mr. Maccalla. We do hope, however, that he will try to explain to us how baptism came in the room of circumcision, and yet so different from it. But this doctrine of substitution is carried very far by Mr. Maccalla. The Lord's supper and the first day are substituted for Jewish ordinances, What is the substitute for the feast of tabernacles, the pentecost, the altars of Israel, the tythes, the high priest, the ordinary priests, the Levites!! &c. &c. Christ is the Christian's passover, the apostle says, Christ's circumcision is the putting off of the sins of the flesh, and Christ is himself the believer's rest. But these topics belong not to this discussion.

[The day being far advanced the discussion here closed. Adjourned till to-morrow at ten o'clock.)

[Saturday morning, fourth day of the discussion, met at eleven o'clock, A. M. Bishop Warder commenced with prayer. ]

Mr. Maccalla then began:

The subject on which we last addressed you was that of the seals of the covenant. Circumcision was once a seal of the Abrahamic covenant. This seal has given place to baptism. This we have proved, first, from three important points of resemblance. 1st. Circumcision and baptism, at its first institution, were ordinances in which the subjects were recognized as members of the church. 2nd. Circumcision and baptism, at its first institution, were both seals of the righteousness of faith. 3rd. Circumcision and baptism, at its first institution, were both emblematical of sanctification. The former was an emblem of the circumcision of the heart, which is equivalent to sanctification; and the latter is an emblem of the washing of regeneration, or renewal of the Holy Ghost. In the second place we have shown from the New Testament that baptism is called Christian circumcision.

To this it has been objected that there are many points in which baptism and circumcision differ. The Baptists differ from one another in many respects, especially in their forms of worship, and yet they consider themselves as one and the same people; a few, or a good many differences are, by them, considered as not interfering with their being the successors of those Baptists that have preceded them. These differences they can easily overlook, as matters of no moment, when the question is about themselves: but when it comes to any point concerning the Pedobaptists, every little difference in churches, covenants, and seals, is magnified into an essential difference. Then, what would have been reckoned a matter unworthy of notice, becomes of infinite importance: what could have been easily surmounted, then becomes an impassible mountain. So in the present case; because the seals differ in some unimportant points, they say they cannot be the same. My opponent would represent that because there may be a difference in the time of administering the two seals, this difference must destroy the validity of the ordinance when administered. I do not think so; a few days or weeks of difference, in point of time, in the administration of an ordinance, cannot destroy the validity of it. If this were the case, then the circumcision of those Jews in Joshua's time, who had so many 3 ears neglected this observance, would have been invalid. But we find that their circumcision was as valid as if it had been administered when eight days old. Fid us and Cyprian held, as well as myself, that baptism came in the room of circumcision, yet they considered it not necessary to its validity, that it should be always administered on the eighth day.

The whole of those points of difference which Mr. Campbell mentioned yesterday evening I do not remember, and we all see I do not take notes as my opponent does. But, indeed, I do not wish to remember them all; as they are so trifling and unimportant I do not wish to incumber my memory with matters of so small significance. Nor do I think it necessary to enter into such minutiae. I maintain the grand principle, that baptism came in the room of circumcision. The extension of this seal to females does not impair its validity. Besides, the New Testament furnishes us with precedents of female baptism. We are there informed that women as well as men were baptized. And as to another difference he mentioned about the administrators, it is of no material consequence in the main argument. The advantages arising from an ordinance does not depend upon those trifling differences. It rests upon the grand fact that the one came in the room of the other. In the Old Testament the males enjoyed many advantages over the female. This difference has been set aside, in a good degree under the New. The Jews used to say, and the modern Jews yet say, and thank God for it, that the men are more highly favored than the women. Yes; in their prayers they thank God that they were not born women.

Seeing there is no weight in those differences which Mr. Campbell has mentioned, I proceed to notice a new evidence in favour of my sentiments on this subject. Philip, iii. 3.

“Beware of the concision; for we (Christians) are the true circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh.” The concision were those Jews that placed an unlawful emphasis upon circumcision in the flesh. In cautioning the Christians against their arguments in favour of the circumcision of the flesh, the apostle informed them that they were the TRUE circumcision. Those baptized Christians at Philippi were now accounted for the circumcision, having received the substitute, baptism. The old rite was vacated, and they who still adhered to it were concision, but those who were baptized were “the true circumcision.” So that Abraham is no longer the father of the old circumcision only, but he is the father of the true circumcision also.

If Mr. Campbell will deny that the circumcision made without hands, afterwards called the circumcision of Christ, or the Christian circumcision, is baptism, it is of little consequence for me to try to maintain any point with him. If the plain testimony of the apostle Paul, who immediately explains this circumcision of Christ, as being buried with Christ in baptism; I repeat, if this plainest testimony is denied, it is of little use to reason with him on the subject of circumcision: or indeed on any other. Just hear the apostle, my friends, and then judge whether I or my opponent contradict him, by the circumcision of Christ buried with him in baptism. By the Christian circumcision ye are baptized; was ever there a testimony more explicit!

Mr. CAMPBELL then replied: —

My opponent has not removed one objection to his substitute for circumcision. He would not burthen his memory with such trifling matters! So let it be! If ever this discussion should meet the public eye, I am wofully mistaken, if his whole course in this controversy will not appear in the highest degree evasive, Assertion and evasion are the two most prominent features in the polemical character of Mr. Maccalla. His allusion to certain points of essential difference between circumcision and baptism, only show that he has nothing, even plausible, to say of those unnoticed “trifling” points: for it he had, he would have alluded to them, as readily as to the two or three at which he glanced, with an air of seeming indifference. With regard to the time of administering, he has found the usual refuge in those Jews that could not, without preferring sacrifice to mercy, be circumcised, while peregrinating the wilderness. A noble refuge indeed, and sound logical conclusion! What was once done in an extraordinary circumstance, becomes a precedent for ordinary practice.* Because David and his associates once dared, in a case of extreme necessity, to eat the loaves of the presence—the shew bread; this must be explained into a precedent for every person to do so with impunity!!! Such is the logic of Mr. Maccalla. He draws a general conclusion from one particular proposition! This is not more marvelous than his accounting for the extension of privilege to females under the New Testament. In this instance he renounces the doctrine of substitution and becomes a Baptist. He does not infer the right of females to baptism from circumcision, no, this he manfully abdicates; and argues for it on New Testament grounds. He is, in one sex, a Baptist in principle, another concession respecting the male sex would make him a Baptist in both, sexes, in theory. Notice, then, my friends, that Mr. Maccalla only derives the half of the subjects of baptism from the old covenant and circumcision; the other half he takes from the new covenant without circumcision!!!

But let us again look back at his evasive course. He asserts that both circumcision and baptism are seals of the same covenant. I asked him to produce one testimony of holy scripture, to show that baptism was ever called a seal of any covenant. Did he attempt it? No. I then pledged myself to rest the whole controversy, as far as I was concerned in it, upon his proving from Rom. iv. II, that circumcision was to any, or every Jew, what it was to Abraham. Did he meet me on this topic? No. And yet he goes on asserting these points as though he had proved every thing! And, again, I gave him a similar challenge to discuss Col. ii. 11, 12. Has he met me on that point either? No, no. In no one instance, from the commencement of this discussion, dare he encounter me on any definite terms—he does best at a great distance. He keeps off at sea, fearing to be land bound. But he asserted in his last address, that the circumcision made without hands was baptism,—Yes, and that the circumcision of Christ is equivalent to Christian circumcision, which he says is in the next verse called baptism. Now it is an universal rule, that the correct definition of a word will always make good sense, when substituted in lieu of the term defined. This will not be denied. Let us then say, with Mr. Maccalla, that "the circumcision made without hands," is properly defined baptism, and that the "circumcision of Christ," is also properly defined baptism. Then let us read the verses with the definition, instead of the terms thus defined,—"In whom also ye are circumcised with baptism, in putting off" the body of the sins of the flesh by baptism, buried with him in baptism, in baptism also you are risen with him!!" This is no tautology—this is making every thing of baptism with a witness! Such is Mr. Maccalla's explanation of this text. Let him exonerate himself from it if he can.

Once more, on the subject of assertion, Mr. Maccalla has again and again asserted that circumcision was a sign of spiritual blessings—of the circumcision of the heart. Query, Was circumcision a sign of the circumcision of the heart to the whole Jewish nation that fell in the wilderness? Was it the sign of the circumcision of the heart to one of Abraham's descendants? No; not one. Do, Mr. Maccalla, stop and prove this assertion if you can—that circumcision was a sign of the circumcision of the heart. Do not assume every thing, do not beg every question. Have some respect to your hearers, and to the reputation of your own intellect.

That circumcision had nothing to do, directly nor indirectly with the salvation of the child, is evident from this one fact, as well as from many other considerations; via. that if a child was about to die on the seventh day, or sixth day, or on the second day of its life, the parents would not circumcise it. No, if it was about to die one hour before it was eight days old, the Jews would not circumcise it. If baptism came in the room of circumcision, why then do many seem so anxious to have their infants sprinkled before they die!! This is a fifteenth contradiction of the doctrine of substitution, in which the practice of the Pedobaptists differs from their principles.

But here I would ask, for the sake of many halting between two opinions, was there, since the beginning of the world, any religious ordinance enjoined upon infants in order to their salvation? Were parents ever commanded to perform any rite, ceremony, or ordinance on, upon, or for, a child, in order to its salvation? I boldly answer No. Twenty hundred years and more passed without one syllable on record of any such appointment for infants. This is confessed on all hands. Was not the divine philanthropy the same during this long period of the world as it is now? Most assuredly it was, and is the same always. From Adam to Abraham millions of children were born, and no teals of the “covenant of grace” for them. Explain this on your own principles, Mr. Maccalla. That circumcision had no connexion with the salvation of them born after its institution, is evident from one fact already mentioned; viz. that it was never to be administered 'until the eighth day; also from many others, particularly that all the circumcised nation, with the exception of a small remnant, were often idolators, worshiped the golden calf, rebelled against God, renounced the Messiah, crucified him, and yet continue in unbelief.

But to those parents who are concerned for the salvation of their children we have a few things to observe,

1. Your parental affection for your children, great as it may be, falls infinitely short, of the tender sympathy of their heavenly Father. They are Ms in a higher sense than they are yours. The feeble representations that human language is able to give of his tender compassion are borrowed from the tenderness of parental and maternal feelings.

   “Such pity as a father hath unto his children dear,
   Like pity shows the Lord to such as Worship him in fear.”

   “Can a woman forget her sucking babe? yea, she may forget, but I, saith the Lord, cannot forget thee.” —Isaiah,

   They are in his bands, and “shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?”

2. Remember that the Son of God took infants into his arms, and blessed them, before Christian baptism was instituted. Yes, he said, “their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.”

3. The sacrifice of Christ is sufficient for their salvation, independent of any deed or thought on the part of man. In the last place, here, consider that neither circumcision nor its substitute, infant baptism, has availed any thing to the salvation of the subjects. There are none more graceless, nor abandoned youths, than some of those baptized infidels that in infancy received “this seal of the Abrahamic covenant.” Be careful, Christian parents, as soon as possible, to bring up your children in the education and admonition of the Lord. But do not think that you can facilitate their salvation by sprinkling them with holy water, or by the sign of the cross.

In disproving Mr. Maccalla's second position we progressed so far yesterday as to adduce five evidences of its falsehood. The first was from the fact, that the consummation and abolition of the Jews' religion and church and the erection of a new kingdom essentially distinct from the Jewish, was foretold by Daniel the prophet. The second, from the fact, that the New Testament opens with the annunciation of the near approach of this new kingdom, The third, from the fact, that the time of the continuance of the “law and the prophets,” as containing and teaching the Jews’ religion, was limited to the time of John the Baptist. The fourth, from the fact, that the manner and terms of admission into the new kingdom were represented, by John the Baptist, and by the Saviour, as essentially different from the manner and terms of admission into the former; that members and officers of the Jewish kingdom of God could not be, by virtue of their membership in that kingdom, admitted into the kingdom of Jesus Christ. The fifth, from the fact, that Jesus taught that he was, in the future time, to build his church upon a foundation different from that on which the Jewish commonwealth was built. We now proceed to a sixth argument or evidence of the erroneousness of Mr. Maccalla’s capital position; which is,

That the kingdom of Christ was to be given to his disciples exclusively—Luke
xii. 32. “Fear not, my little flock, for it has pleased your Father to give you the kingdom.” Here the kingdom is represented as being given to Christ’s disciples by the good pleasure of the Father. Numerous as the Jewish nation was, and small as the number of his disciples was, at this time, the new kingdom is promised to them, to the exclusion of the whole nation. So it came to pass in the commencement of this kingdom. —Acts ii.

A seventh evidence of the same fact is found in the declaration of Messiah to his apostles. Matt. xix. 28. “Verily,” said the King, “I say unto you, that at the renovation, when the Son of man shall be seated on his glorious throne, ye, my followers, sitting upon twelve thrones, shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel.” —Campbell’s Translation. Observe here, the erection of this new kingdom is called emphatically THE RENOVATION! in the common translation THE REGENERATION; not the continuation of the Jewish church. Again observe, the coronation and inauguration of Messiah in heaven is to precede this renovation. In the last place on this topic observe, that in the renovation, when Messiah shall have been crowned Lord of all, the apostles were to be under him, the only legislators and rulers in the establishment of this new kingdom. They were exclusively to judge, pronounce judgments and statutes, laws and doctrine to the new kingdom. Their conduct on the day of Pentecost, called the regeneration or renovation, is positive proof of the accomplishment of this promise. The subjects of this kingdom then continued steadfastly in the APOSTLES' doctrines, in the APOSTLES' "koinonia" or fellowship; in the APOSTLES' breaking of the loaf; and in the APOSTLES' prayers. Every doctrine, precept, commandment, or observance is now surnamed THE APOSTLES'. Assuredly they were now placed upon thrones; they now pronounced statutes and judgments to the remnant: of the twelve tribes of Israel.

An eighth evidence of the essential difference of the Jewish and Christian churches is deduced from the GOOD CONFESSION the King of Israel made before Pontius Pilate, John xviii. 36, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, my adherents would have fought, to prevent me falling into the hands of the Jews; but my kingdom is not hence." Had his kingdom been like the Jewish, he informs the Roman governor, his adherents, like the adherents of the ancient kings of Israel, (for, for some time past the Jews had no king) would have fought, and ten would have put a thousand to flight.

The ancient kingdom embraced all born into the world, good and bad, as its subjects, consequently was of this world, "but," said the King of Israel to Pontius Pilate, "it is only every one that obeyeth my voice that will be a subject of my kingdom." How great the difference between a kingdom of this world and one not of this world! The former was the character of the Jewish, the latter the character of Christ's kingdom.

Mr. MACCALLA resumes his course: — Mr. Campbell has laid no little stress upon those numerous points of differences which he sees between our practice of infant baptism, and our views of this ordinance, and that rite which preceded it as a seal of God's gracious ecclesiastical covenant. He cannot admit that baptism came in the room of circumcision, as its substitute, because of these differences. His objection is predicated upon this general mistake, that a substitute must be precisely the same as the principal, or that for which it is substituted. Upon the principle adopted in this objection, there can be no such thing, in any department of men and things, as a substitute. In the last war we had many men who served as substitutes. Now, on this principle, there could not have been one substitute. For had he been the officer to whom a substitute presented himself, he would, on his way of objecting, have refused him, as being higher, thicker, heavier, stronger, wiser, younger, straighter, swifter, whiter, &c. than the principal. He might have found a hundred differences that, with him, would have been insurmountable. Thus, my friends, you see that his objection lies against the whole principle of substitution, and would exclude, as far as carried into effect, all substitutes from every department in which they have hitherto been accepted.

I proceed to shew that the primitive fathers viewed baptism as a substitute for circumcision, contrary to what Mr. Campbell affirmed yesterday, that Calvin and Beza were the first who taught that baptism came in the room of circumcision.

[Mr. Maccalla read from Wall's history of infant baptism sundry extracts too long for insertion, but of those we shall give a fair specimen. This may reasonably be expected, as it does not affect our views nor our argument, though they were ten times more numerous, and ten times more pointed.]

Chrysostom, quoted by Dr. Wall, p. 96, says, "Our circumcision, I mean the grace of baptism, gives cure without pain, and procures to us a thousand benefits. And it has no determinate time as the ancient circumcision had; but one that is in the beginning of his age, or one that is in the middle of it, or one that is in his old age, may receive this circumcision made without hands." Thus spoke Chrysostom within two hundred and seventy years of the apostolic age. This eminent father there evidently agrees with the views we have given of Col. ii. 11, 12, and indeed with our whole views of this seal.

Basil, as quoted p. 83, saith "A Jew does not delay circumcision, because of the threatening that every soul that is not circumcised the eighth day shall be cut off from his people, and dost thou put off the circumcision made without hands, which is performed in baptism, when thou hearest our Lord himself say," Verily, verily I say unto you, except one be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God?" Here you must observe a most striking resemblance between the style of Basil and Chrysostom on the analogy between the two seals. Basil was a cotemporary writer of Chrysostom's age.
Austin saith, who was also a cotemporary with the two preceding, “We may make an estimate how much baptism avails infants, by the circumcision which God’s people formerly received.”

Cyprian, who lived one hundred and twenty years nearer the apostolic age, Dr. Wall’s His. p. 39, says, “Christ has given us baptism, the spiritual circumcision.”

But Justin Martyr, who wrote within about forty years of the apostolic age, saith, p. 10, “We have not received this carnal circumcision, but the spiritual circumcision, and we have received it by baptism. It is allowed to all persons to receive it in the same way.”

I have produced these testimonies in evidence of the antiquity of the views I have advanced on the subject of baptism and circumcision, as seals of the covenant; or particularly in proof of the assertion that the primitive fathers considered baptism as the circumcision made without hands, and this, I conceive, is fully proved.

To conclude this topic I would only add, that the force of this argument depends wholly upon the grand points of coincidence already mentioned, not upon an exact agreement in every minutiae. This we do not plead as necessary to a substitute. Nor is it pleaded by any, but by those who would destroy the principle of substitution altogether. Remember, my friends, that circumcision and baptism have been shewn to be both initiatory seals, or marks of church membership; and that they equally have been seals of the righteousness of faith, and also the sign and means of sanctification.

I proceed to my fourth position, viz. “that the administration of this seal was once enjoined by divine authority.” This will occupy but very little time.

A positive command for the administration of circumcision we have in Gen. xvii. 10—14. “This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man-child among you shall be circumcised. And ye shall circumcise the flesh of your foreskin; and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you. And he that is eight days old shall be circumcised among you, every man-child in your generations, he that is born in the house, or bought with money of any stranger, which is not of thy seed. He that is born in thy house and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised: and my Covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant. And the uncircumcised man-child whose flesh of his foreskin is not circumcised, that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant.” This ordinance was once enjoined by divine authority. Infants were once taken into the covenant and sealed. This seal was stamped upon their flesh. The servants of God are now sealed in their foreheads, as they are represented by John in the Revelations. And what place could be more suitable for baptism? The part affected in the administration, it is true, is of subordinate importance, yet we see a peculiar suitableness in selecting the forehead for the part to be sealed with the seal of God. “No person who wishes, for any important purpose, to exhibit a sign, thinks of putting the sign in a cellar.” No: he puts it in the most conspicuous place.

I observe too many smiling countenances in this congregation.

I hope, my Pedobaptist friends, you will not imitate that unbecoming levity so often apparent in the faces of many present. While the Baptists are smiling I hope you will be praying. Yes, my Pedobaptist friends, pray for me. Pray for the cause of truth to triumph, and pray that when our cause triumphs we may bear it with humility. That we may give God the glory. O think of the solemnity of this occasion. I stand here in the defence of the whole Pedobaptist world; in their defence from imputations the news false and foul. Do then, I beseech you, pray that I may defend it with wisdom and prudence, that it may manifestly triumph.

Having produced a divine command for the administration of this seal to infants, I come now to my fifth position, viz. “The administration of this seal to infants being once enjoined by divine authority, was never prohibited by the same authority.

This is a point, to the consideration of which, the attention of the Baptists has been often called. Infants, they are sometimes constrained to admit, were once taken into the church as members, and were once the subject's of an initiatory rite declarative of their membership, but when asked to produce a warrant for their rejection, they have hitherto declined producing any. This becomes their duty; we having proved that they were once taken into the church, it is fairly presumed that they still retain the place which was divinely given them, until it is taken away by the same authority.
that gave it. It lies then upon my opponent to produce scriptural evidence that this command has been abrogated, and this privilege taken away from them. If he do not, our proposition is in fact proved. But if he produce such a command, we will confess that all our labour has been lost, for we know that it will avail nothing to have proved that infants were once taken into the church, and received the seal by divine authority, if by the same authority they have been cast out. If this is done, something will be done that has never yet been done; if it be not done, our first point is gained, it is fully established that we have yet a divine command for infant baptism.

Mr. CAMPBELL then replied: —

Before adverting to the last speech, I proceed, for the sake of connexion, to finish, if possible, the induction of particular evidences of the falsehood of Mr. Maccalla's second position. I have already submitted eight arguments or evidences of the plainest character, all declarative of an essential difference between the Jewish church and the Christian kingdom. Mark it well, my friends, Mr. Maccalla has not replied to one of them.

A ninth evidence, that the Christian kingdom and the Jewish are essentially different, appears from the erection of the first Christian congregation in the metropolis of the Jewish nation, as detailed in Acts ii. Observe this congregation was composed of Jews exclusively. The three thousand converted that day, and the one hundred and twenty disciples already converted, then in the metropolis Jerusalem, had all been once members of the Jewish church, in “full communion” with Annas and Caiphas, with the scribes and Pharisees; in short, with the whole Jewish church. But now mark the difference. The three thousand Jews pierced to the heart, with the evidences of their guilt, and with the miraculous evidence before them of Messiah's ascension and coronation, are brought to repentance, are now born of the Spirit and of water, and thus added to the one hundred and twenty which hereafter are called the church. Repentance, faith in the Messiah, and immersion or baptism into the sacred name, were prerequisites, essential prerequisites, to admission into this church. Circumcision, that famous seal, “that sign of the circumcision of the heart,” “that seal of the righteousness of faith,” “that initiatory rite, declarative of church membership,” does not signify any thing to one of its possessors, to admission into this kingdom. It will not serve as a passport across the threshold of this newly erected kingdom.

We shall suppose that one of the members of the Jewish church made application for admission into this church formed in Jerusalem, we shall suppose that he was of the sentiments of my opponent. He comes forward and presents his plea. “I am a son of Abraham, a child of the covenant that God made with our fathers. I was circumcised the eighth day. I received the seal of the gracious ecclesiastical covenant, a sign of the circumcision of the heart, a seal of the righteousness of faith, a sign of sanctification. I am a member of the church of God, of good standing, touching the righteousness that is in the law I am blameless. Now, as the covenant of the church is still the same, unchangeable! as the seal is still the same, as religion is still the same, and as God never had but one church, I pray for admission into this church, and I hope, you apostles, and the whole church which are Jews, of the stock of Abraham, will not reject me from your communion of which I desire to be a participant.” Such would have been Mr. Maccalla's plea at that time, if a Jew, and possessed of his present sentiments. Now let us hear Peter. “All this will not do. You must repent and be baptized for the remission of your sins, in the name of the Lord Jesus; otherwise, we cannot receive you, according to the commandment of our King.” He is rejected. And Mr. Maccalla's theory is cast out with him.

The practices of this church differ essentially from the practices of the Jewish church. When baptized, they continued steadfastly, not in the laws and statutes of Israel, but in the apostles' doctrine; not in the support of the priesthood, but in communicating to the necessities of saints, called the fellowship; not in the Jewish festivals, but in breaking the emblematical loaf; not in the devotion of the priests, but in prayers taught them by the apostles; not in praising God with timbrels, and psalteries, and the dance; but praising God, viva voce, with songs of gratitude and praise.

A tenth evidence of the falsehood of Mr. Maccalla's theory we have, Eph. ii. 14, 15, “For he is our peace, who hath made both (Jews and gentiles) one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in (under) himself one new man, (one new church) so making peace (between Jews and gentiles.”) We are here positively told that Jesus Christ erected under himself, one new church; so all critics paraphrase it. Hear MacKnight, “And hath abolished by his death, in the flesh, the cause of the enmity between the Jews and gentiles, even the commandments of the law, concerning the ordinances of circumcision, sacrifices, meats, washings, and holy days; which being founded in the mere pleasure of God, might be abolished when he saw fit. These ordinances Jesus abolished, that he might create Jews and gentiles under himself as head, into one new man or church, animated by new principles, thus making peace between them.” A new church, then, and not the aid one new modified, was the grand result of the manifestation of God in the flesh. Essentially new, as Jews and gentiles were now associated under essentially new principles. Thus Mr. Maccalla's theory is plainly subverted by the most positive declarations of the Holy Scriptures.

An eleventh evidence in support of our views, and subversive of those of my opponent, we have Heb. xii. 18—28. Christian Jews (for such are addressed in this epistle) are here said to have come to a state of things essentially different from that to which the church in the wilderness came. Sundry points of difference are here stated by the apostle in the state of Jews and Christians. A tangible mount burning with fire, blackness, darkness, tempest, sound of a trumpet, and voice of words; each of which was emblematical. These were the characteristics of the Jewish state. The state to which Christians came, is characterised by sundry properties also. Mount Zion or the city of the living God, viz. the heavenly Jerusalem, myriads of angels, general assembly of the first born enrolled in heaven, God the judge of all, spirits of just men perfected. Jesus the Mediator of the New Testament, and the blood of sprinkling. Of these we cannot now speak particularly. On the first reading an essential difference in the two states appears. The exhortation predicated upon this representation in the 28th verse is sufficient for our present purpose, if nothing more had been said. We Christians having received a KINGDOM THAT CANNOT BE MOVED, in this respect, essentially different from the Jewish, which was moveable, and therefore was removed, let us be grateful; let us have charin, gratitude, by which we may worship God acceptably.”

As we discover it will not be possible to finish this topic at this time, we shall advert to my opponent's last address. “Sophistry,” says one of the finest writers on rhetoric, “is not to be used except where the most clear and convincing arguments are to be opposed; in such cases it is useful, when to attempt a rational refutation would only endanger the whole cause.” This maxim Mr. Macalla seems to have learned. For, in finding the points of difference between circumcision and baptism so numerous and so glaring, he despaired of being able by a reference to them to reconcile; matters, he wisely then lets them alone; forgets them, and introduces sophistry, not indeed the most difficult to detect. He introduces a, military substitute instead of a theological one. And this is not all, nor the worst of it; he draws his conclusions from the personal differences between the substitute and his principal, and not from any difference in the performance of the offices or duties which the substitute is obliged to perform for his principal. Had we made objections to baptism as a substitute for circumcision, because the one was a watery rite and the other a bloody one, there would have been something more specious in his sophistry. But we objected to the substitute as differing from the principal on the ground of its not performing the offices or duties of the principal. If a military substitute performs all the duties incumbent on the principal, he is completely a substitute, although his person might differ in one hundred respects from him. Now if baptism performed all the offices and duties of circumcision, neither more nor less, we would not object to it, as a substitute, because of its personal or characteristic differences already mentioned under the idea of blood and water. If Mr. Macalla introduces this sophism of comparison not knowing it to be such, he deserves our pity; if otherwise, we will not say what he deserves.

The quotations read from Dr. Wall's history does not disprove our assertion that Calvin and Beza were the first who introduced baptism in the room of circumcision, in the sense contended for by Mr. Maccalla. That many of the ancient writers spoke of baptism and circumcision with a reference to each other, is one thing, and that they argued that the one came in the room of the other, as its substitute, as a seal of the same covenant, is another thing. And as to the opinions of those gentlemen referred to, we shall, in a proper place, attend to them. Their opinions are of no more authority than those of my opponent. Antiquity does not, like charity, cover a multitude of sins. And names as sacred and more ancient than they, can be produced as patronizing the most unmeaning and idolatrous superstitions of papacy. We shall only present one quotation from Tertullian, A. D. 216, expressive of the vigorous growth of wild opinions in less than two hundred years after the apostolic age. —De Corona Militis cited by Du Pin, p. 92, Vol. i. “To begin,” says he, “with baptism, when we are ready to enter into the water, and even before we make our protestations before the bishop, and in the church, that we renounce the devil and all his pomps and ministers; afterwards we are plunged in the water three times, and they make us answer to some things which are not precisely set down in the gospel;
after that they make us taste milk and honey, and we bathe ourselves every day during the week. We receive the sacrament of the eucharist instituted by Jesus Christ, when we eat, and in the morning assemblies; and we do not receive it but from the hands of those that preside there. We other yearly oblations for the dead in honour of the martyrs. We believe that it is not lawful to fast on Sundays, and to pray to God kneeling. From Easter to Whitsuntide we enjoy the same privilege. We take great care not to suffer any part of the wine and consecrated bread to fall to the ground. We often sign ourselves with the sign of the cross. If you demand a law for these practices, taken from the Scriptures, we cannot find one there, but we must answer— that 'tis tradition that has established them, custom that has authorised them, and faith [superstition] that has made them to be observed.” Remember this testimony of this venerable father, a great master in Israel, and then say, how much is the opinion of any of this or after ages worth on any religious subject not found in the Bible?

We admit that circumcision was once enjoined upon the Jews by divine authority, as proved by Mr. Maccalla in his fourth position. But we are very far from admitting that infant baptism was once enjoined by divine authority. Among all the coincidences Mr. Maccalla discovered between baptism and circumcision, he did not notice this one, “be circumcised for the remission of your sins.” Had he found out this, he might have argued that both baptism and circumcision were intended for the remission of sins!!

Mr. Maccalla's address upon laughing is the best refutation of his own scheme of sealing in the forehead. We think there is as little evil in a smile, as there is of virtue in, a sigh, whether it be from Baptist or Pedobaptist.

Mr. Maccalla is traveling with much greater rapidity to-day than usual, because, perhaps, his “matter” is not so weighty. He asks for a divine command to cast infants out of the church, upon the supposition of their having been once members of it. He makes this demand with an air of confidence of our inability to furnish it, which would lead you to think it is impossible. Our present opportunity forbids our making an experiment, but we shall try it in our next.

Mr. MACCALLA then arose: —

The passage quoted from Eph. ii. 14, 15, was urged by Pond as a proof of the identity of the two churches, and I fully intended to have brought it forward as such, but I happened to overlook it in the proper place for its appearance. I will only remark on it now, that the apostle here represents the Jews, and the Gentiles when converted, as making but one church. The twain denotes the Jews and the Gentiles as now forming but one church, one visible professing people. This certainly is more accordant with the apostle's object, than to show that the Jews were one church, and the Christians another “essentially” different from it.

Having now come to the close of my first item of method, which was to produce a divine command for infant baptism, before introducing the second topic, I will bring together in one view the different parts of this demonstration, that it may appear with more clearness and force. In the first place, then, I proved that the seed of Abraham was divinely constituted a true visible church of God. Then I proved that the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, constituted but one and the same church. Ia the next place, I proved that Jewish circumcision before Christ, and Christian baptism after Christ, were both seals of the same covenant, though in different forms.
I then proved that the administration of this seal to infants was once enjoined by divine authority. And, in the last place, that it was never set aside, or that there is no command to cast out infants from the church. The conclusion, then, is, that when Jesus Christ commanded his apostles to baptize disciples, they understood infants to be included, and accordingly baptized them. For under all the preceding circumstances they must have understood the command to baptize disciples as extending to such as were included in the covenant, and formerly treated as members of the church; in one word, to such as were divinely commanded to be baptized. As my opponent has not produced a divine command for casting out, infants, we must consider our last proposition as proved. Infants then are commanded to be baptized.

I now proceed to the second head of method proposed, viz. To show that there is probable evidence of Apostolic practice of infant baptism.

The baptism of proselytes among the Jews was evidently a practice of the greatest antiquity, and the baptism of John appears to have been derived from this baptism. Indeed, it appears to be nothing more than what every Jewish prophet was expected to perform. Thus when John the Baptist denied being that prophet, nor Elias, nor the Messiah, he was asked, “Why, then, baptizest thou if so?” &c. The only wonder expressed by the Pharisees was, not at his baptizing, but at his baptizing and at the same time declaring himself not to be a character such as they supposed entitled to baptize. Our Lord's reply to Nicodemus implies that baptism was an ordinance of great antiquity, when he told him of being born of water. Nicodemus not seeming to understand him, he said, “Art thou a master in Israel, and knowest not these things?” If there had not been some means by which he might have understood the phrase “born of water,” in some well established custom, it would have been no reproach to him to have been ignorant of it.

The baptism of proselytes is supposed, and with great probability too, to have taken its rise from the baptism of the Jews when passing through the Red Sea, to which Paul refers, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2, “Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should he ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.” Thus all the Jews in after ages conceived it necessary for those to be baptized who renounced idolatry, seeing the whole nation was thus baptized when renouncing the idolatry of the Egyptians. But as some moderns, such as the Socinian Robinson, have denied this proselyte baptism, we shall produce a number of respectable testimonies in support of it.

We shall begin with CALMET, who, in his dictionary, under the article proselyte, says, “The Jews require three things in a complete proselyte; baptism, circumcision, and sacrifice; but for women, only baptism and sacrifice.”

BROWN. After the Jews had circumcised their proselytes, they washed them in water.

WITSIUS. When a gentile became a proselyte of righteousness, three ceremonies were used, viz. circumcision, baptism, and sacrifice.

REISKIUS. Jewish baptism is a solemn rite, instituted by God, in which proselytes of both sexes, in the presence of three credible witnesses, are dipped in water, that being legally cleansed and regenerated, they may enter on the profession of a new religion.

PRIDEAUX. The Jews, in our Saviour's time, were very sedulous to proselyte the Gentiles to their religion; and when thus proselyted, they were initiated by baptism, sacrifice, and circumcision.

STACKHOUSE. The custom of the Jews in all ages has been to receive their heathen proselytes by baptism, as well as by sacrifice and circumcision.

Dr. WALL. Whenever gentiles were proselyted to the Jewish religion, they were initiated by circumcision, the offering of sacrifice, and baptism. They were all baptized, males and females, adults and infants. This was their constant practice, from the time of Moses to that of our Saviour, and from that period to the present day.

Dr. ADAM CLARKE. The apostles knew well that the Jews not only circumcised the children of proselytes, but also baptized them. The children and even infants of proselytes were baptized among the Jews. They were in consequence reputed clean, and partakers of the blessings of the covenant.
Maimonides, as quoted by Dr. Wall, “Isuri Bia, c. 13 and 14. And so in all ages, when a heathen is willing to enter into covenant, and gather himself under the wings of the majesty of God, and take upon him the yoke of the law, he must be circumcised, and baptized, and bring a sacrifice: or, of a woman, she must be baptized, and bring a sacrifice. As it is written, as you are, so shall the stranger be. How are you? by circumcision and baptism and bringing a sacrifice; so likewise the stranger or proselyte through all generations, by circumcision and baptism and bringing a sacrifice. And at this time, when there is no sacrificing, they must be circumcised and baptized, and when the temple shall be built they are to bring the sacrifice. A stranger that is circumcised and not baptized, or baptized and not circumcised, is not a proselyte until he be both baptized and circumcised. And he must be baptized in the presence of three persons, &c.

Even as they circumcise and baptize strangers, so do they circumcise and baptize servants who are received from the heathen, &c.

Again. — In all ages as often as a gentile will enter into the covenant, and receive the yoke of the law upon him, it was necessary that circumcision and baptism should be used for him, besides sprinkling of the sacrifice, and if it were a woman, baptism and sacrifice, according to Num. xv. 15, as to you, so also to the proselyte.

[Other extracts more lengthy, but to the same import, were at this time read, the above are both a fair and full specimen. ]

Mr. CAMPBELL then addressed the people: — When Mr. Maccalla shall have got through with his proselyte baptism, we shall make a few remarks on it. But one of the testimonies adduced against the identity of the two churches has been noticed by Mr. Maccalla. His noticing it, implies he would have noticed them all, if he had any thing to notice against them. His noticing this one, only suggests that the others are to him unanswerable. His friend Pond, for whom he seems to have too much respect, tells him that this passage in Eph. ii. 14, 15, proves the identity of the two churches. This is another evidence that neither Mr. Pond nor Mr. Maccalla are the most sagacious critics, nor the ablest scriptureans. To have favoured the theory of Messrs. Pond and Maccalla, the word twain should have denoted the Jewish church and the Christian church; and the one new man then would have had to mean a church distinct from both!! To suppose that the twain denoted the Jewish church and a Gentile church, and the one new man the Christian church, makes the matter worse: for where was this ancient Gentile church!! But the twain means simply Jewish people and Gentile people, and the one new man denotes a new body, a new association, never existing before. Mr. Pond ought not to be Mr. Maccalla's magnus Appollo.

Mr. Maccalla tells us what he has proved. He has proved that there was a divine command to circumcise children, and this is his divine command to baptize children! Be it known unto all men, that Mr. Maccalla in four days proved that there was a command to circumcise infants! And this circumcise he converts into the word baptize, by christening it, or by some strange process too profound for any person of ordinary sagacity to comprehend. We forbear to make any remarks upon the morality of Mr. Maccalla's saying, and saying he “has proved,” he “has proved,” he “has proved,” this and that proposition. We shall leave you, my friends, to judge what he has proved. We are willing to say he has proved, first, that God commanded Jewish infants to be circumcised. But who denied it? And he has also proved himself to be a singular disputant.

We proceed to adduce our last evidence, pro tempore, of the essential difference between the Jewish and Christian kingdoms And in the first place, we assert, that the constitution of the Jewish kingdom, and that of the Christian, are essentially different. Or, in other words, that the covenant on which the Jews were erected into “a holy nation” and “a peculiar people,” are essentially different from that covenant on which Jews and Gentiles are erected into the kingdom of our Lord and King Jesus Christ. Now for the proof. When Israel came out of Egypt under the guidance of Moses, they were brought to mount Sinai in the deserts of Arabia. Hitherto they formed no nation, no church. They could not hitherto be a church, or an ecclesia, for they had never been called out. And hitherto they wanted every thing that Mr. Maccalla deemed essential to a church state. They had no oracles, no social ordinances, no officers, nothing essential to a church. They were never called a church, until in the wilderness. They were slaves and idolaters in Egypt.

The preface to the constitution which erected them into a church, or holy nation, we have in these words: “And Moses went up unto God, and the Lord called unto him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shall thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel; Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles’ wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice in deed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.”—Ex. xix. 3, 6. Thus we see their becoming a holy nation, a kingdom of priests, dependent upon the answer they sent back by Moses to God. It depended upon an IF. Let us hear the answer of the people, verses 7, 8, “And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces nil these words which the Lord commanded him. And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do. And Moses returned the words of the people unto the Lord.” Thus the preliminaries were settled. Preparation is next made for proclaiming the Magna Charta, the covenant or constitution, verses 9—11: “And the Lord said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. And Moses told the words of the people unto the Lord. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their clothes, and be ready against the third day: for the third day the Lord will come down in the sight of all the people upon mount Sinai.” Then for the covenant. This the twentieth chapter details. It was written on two tables of stone. This time and these circumstances are ever afterwards referred to, as the commencement of their ecclesiastical and national existence. Thus Jeremiah the prophet, when speaking of the “nun aion,” and of the “mellen aion” of the Jewish age and the Christian age, saith, xxxi. 31—34, “Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and will remember their sin no more.”
ON BAPTISM.

The prophet Ezekiel also refers to the same transactions, and promises the union of Jews and Gentiles under a covenant positively declared to be not the Sinaitic. Ez. xvi. 60, 61. “Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, thine elder and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters, but not by thy covenant.” NOT BY THY COVENANT. Mark it well.

Now let us hear Paul, Heb. viii. 7—13, “For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more. In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.” Thus a new covenant distinct, essentially distinct, from the old, is declared to be the covenant under which the Christian church exists. That Israel, as a church national, existed under, and was constituted by the Sinaitic covenant, has been shewn to be a fact irrefragible; and that the spiritual seed of Abraham, whether Jews or Gentiles, is constituted by, and exists as a church under another covenant, is as plain and as unanswerable.

We now come to a paragraph in Paul's Epistle to the Galatians of great momentum in this controversy. We deferred our remarks on it until now. This being the proper place for its consideration, we shall bestow upon it a little attention: we shall first read the paragraph. Gal. iv. 21 —31. “Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a freewoman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free,”

On this observe 1st. that the law and the covenant at Sinai are considered one and the same. Being under the law, verse 21, and being under the covenant in the allegory, are considered by the apostle as the same circumstance.

2nd. Abraham's two wives, Hagar and Sarah, represented the two covenants, the old and the new, “for these are the two covenants.”

3rd. Ishmael and Isaac resemble the people under the two covenants. Ishmael, the son of the bondmaid, was born a slave; for a slave gendereth or bringeth forth slaves, not freemen. So did the old Testament or covenant, compared to Hagar, which is one of the names, of mount Sinai in Arabia; and she, to wit. Hagar resembles the then present Jerusalem or Jewish church, which was in bondage under the law, or old covenant. Isaac, the son of the freewoman, resembled the people under the new covenant, which is called the Jerusalem above, because proclaimed from heaven, by him who is in heaven; not from mount Sinai in Arabia, on the earth.

4. As Ishmael was brought forth in the natural or ordinary means, he fitly denotes the natural descendants or fleshly seed of Abraham, who lived under the old covenant, and constituted the Jewish “visible” church; the members of which were such by natural birth. Again, as Isaac was brought forth by supernatural means, by faith in God's promise, when the bodies of his parents were, as to his production, as good as dead, by the supernatural agency of Divine power, he fitly denotes the members of the Christian church, which are such not by natural generation, as the Jewish or Pedobaptist members are, but by being born as Isaac was, by faith in God's promise, or by supernatural means.

5. As the children of the deserted woman, Sarah, whose husband deserted her and associated with Hagar, are declared to be more numerous than the children of Hagar, who possessed the husband of the deserted Sarah, so the apostle argues that the spiritual seed or children of Abraham by faith, born like Isaac, would be more numerous than his natural or literal descendants.

6. That as Ishmael, the child of the flesh, persecuted, by railing and reviling, Isaac, the child of promise, so the Jews, the natural descendants of Abraham, and those who plead for church membership on the same ground of natural birth, then, and since, and now persecute, sometimes by railing and reviling, and in time past, by sword and fagot, those who have been born of the freewoman or the children of faith, the sons of the new covenant.

7. But what saith the Scripture? Aye, this is the question: what did Sarah say? Mark it well, my friends. Mark it well, ye Pedobaptists! O it is an oracle you should never forget! What did Sarah say, as the scripture records?
“CAST OUT,” tremendous words! CAST OUT the bondwoman, the old covenant compared to Hagar. Disannul it, vacate it, lay it aside, reject it. Is that all? No, no. CAST OUT the son, of Hagar also, the people of the old covenant. Yes, remember the allegory, as the spirit of inspiration has called and represented it. Ishmael denotes all that are merely the children of the flesh. CAST OUT THE BONDMAID AND HER SON ISHMAEL. For what reason? Because it is decreed of heaven, it is declared by God, that the son of the bondwoman, the people of the old covenant, shall not be members under the new covenant, shall not be heirs of the inheritance with the son of the freewoman, the people who are the sons of Jerusalem which is above, the mother of all believers.

Mr. Maccalla has exultingly demanded a divine command for casting out the natural seed of believers out of the church, or for debarring them from the privileges of the spiritual seed, as inheritors with them of the privileges of members of a church state. Assuredly here is a divine command prohibitory of the admission of the fleshly seed into the society of the children of promise. Whence was Ishmael, the figurative representative of the natural seed of believers, cast out? Out of the house of Abraham; out of a participation of the inheritance of Sarah's son Isaac. He was once a member of that house, once a partaker with Isaac in the blessings of Abraham's house. But now he must be cast out for ever. And that merely for a type or figure of the casting off of the old covenant, and the casting out of the natural seed from a church or family state. If ever there was an explicit oracle most certainly this is one. If ever there was an express divine command, circumstanced and restricted by adjuncts which forbid misapplication, here it is. And were it not for that vail of prejudice and tradition upon the hearts and eyes of Pedobaptists in reading both the Old Testament and the New, we should not have been asked for such a command as Mr. Maccalla has demanded. We have given it. And we hope Mr. Maccalla will try to refute it, or explain it away, if he will not obey it, that we may have an opportunity of exhibiting and enforcing it to greater advantage. We believe it is not in the power of any Pedobaptist to set aside its force, or to explain it away, on any fair or reasonable ground. I request my opponent to try it. I will rest the whole weight of the controversy upon the correctness of the statement I have made, upon the exposition of the allegory I have given.

The last item in this paragraph we shall notice is this glorious truth, last verse, “So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondmaid, but of the freewoman.” Consequently heirs with Isaac. Heirs with Christ of an inheritance incorruptible and unfading. We believers are all children of promise, sons and daughters of the Jerusalem which is above, not of her in bondage with her children. Rejoice Christians, the children of the promise are counted for the seed. Jerusalem above is the city of our nativity, and that Canaan, where the tree of life immortal blooms, is our inheritance.

Mr. MACCALLA resumed his former subject: —

I have, my friends, presented you with a few historical evidences of great respectability demonstrative of the great antiquity of baptism amongst the Jews. The writers referred to clearly shew that the Jews were wont from time immemorial to receive proselytes to their religion by three ceremonies, circumcision, baptism, and sacrifice. It is highly probable that John the Baptist derived his baptism from this Jewish custom. We, in this opinion, concur with the judgment of the most learned writers, ancient and modern.

I will now furnish a few evidences shewing that infant proselytes, as well as adult proselytes, were baptized; i. e. the infants of proselytes together with their parents were baptized. “Gemara Babylon (ad lit. cherith, c. 2.) The proselytes entered not into covenant, but by circumcision, baptism, and sprinkling of blood.

And (ad lit. Jabinot, c. 4.) He is no proselyte, except he be baptized and circumcised; and if he be not baptized, he remains a gentile.

The Talmud Tract. Repudii, speaking of Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, says he was made a proselyte by circumcision, and immersion in water. This baptism differed from the diverse baptisms which St. Paul says were customary among the Jews, for these were often repeated, but this was not given but once to one person. It was called, as Doctor Lightfoot shews, baptism for proselytism, as distinguished from baptism for uncleanness.

It remains now to be inquired, whether not only adult but infant proselytes were baptized by the Jews. Gemara Babylon (Chebeboth, c. 11.) If with a proselyte, his sons and his daughters be made proselytes, that which is done by their father, redounds to their good. The Jerusalem Misna says—If a girl bora of heathen parents be made proselyte after she is three years and a day old, then she is not to have certain privileges there mentioned. And the Misna of Babylon says, that if she be made a proselyte before that age, she shall be entitled to the said privileges. Both agreeing in this, that a child however young, might, according to their custom, be made a proselyte. And the Gemara says, they are wont to baptize such a proselyte in infancy, upon the profession of the house of judgment, for this is for his good. In the Gloss, it is also stated, that if the father of the child be present, the child is baptized at his request; but if not, on the profession of the court. They are wont to baptize, says the Gloss, because none is made a proselyte without circumcision and baptism upon the profession of the house of judgment. That is, three men have the care of his baptism, according to the law of the baptism of proselytes, who do thus become to him a father, and he is by them made a proselyte.”

Maimonides also, in the same chapter already quoted, says, a proselyte that is under age, they are wont to baptize upon the knowledge of the house of judgment, for this is for his good.

Talmud. Babylon. Mass. Javamoth. Jab. xlvi. — When a proselyte is received, then he must be circumcised, and when he is healed, then they baptize him in the presence of two wise men, saying, Behold, he is an Israelite in all things, and if it be a woman, the women lead her to the waters.

Again—the Israelites do not enter into covenant, but by those three things; by circumcision, by baptism, and by a peace-offering, and the proselytes likewise. And the same continues to be the practice of the modern Jews. For Leo Modena, in his history of them, speaking of the admission of proselytes, says—part v. c. 2, They take and circumcise him, and as soon as he is well, he is to wash himself all over in water; and this is to be done in the presence of three Rabbins.”*

We know that some learned men have denied, that pro-

*The above extracts we have copied verbatim from John P. Campbell's Sermon on Baptism, pp. 41, 42, because the condensed view of selyte baptism existed at all among the Jews, until some centuries after the Christian era: such as Dr. Gill, Dr. Owen, and Dr. Lardner. We shall let the arguments of Dr. Gill against it pass for what they are worth. As for the others, they only argue against it from the silence of some Jewish writers upon the subject. And because some writers have said nothing about it, this is no proof that what others have said about it is false. And again, what avails the weight of three or four names, opposing the testimony of such a host of learned and pious antiquarians and divines! The conclusion from the preceding testimonies and considerations is, that it is highly probable that John's baptism, and afterwards Christian baptism, was derived from the Jewish baptisms existing for ages amongst the Jews. The institution of baptism by Christ was no more than approving of an established usage, and that, perhaps, too, of divine authority, and recommending a continuance of this practice in the work of proselytism, or of converting the nations to Christianity.

Mr. Campbell thus replied:

As my opponent has not ventured to attack my remarks on Gal. iv. nor dared to refer to the divine command so often called for, for the exclusion of the natural seed of believers from the Christian church, while destitute of faith, we may certainly conclude that our argument from that portion of scripture, is, as far as in him lies, unassailable, and therefore, we may proceed forthwith to his probable evidence in favour of the apostolic practice of infant baptism, deduced from Jewish proselyte baptism.

Our objections to his “probable evidence” in favour of his hypothesis are the following:

1. This proselyte baptism, if it existed before the Christian era, is itself a human tradition. Neither Moses nor any divine prophet ever recorded one word about it. Mr. Maccalla has not even hinted that it had any divine authority. If it did exist among the Jews, before the Christian era, it existed amongst them as infant baptism exists amongst us, i. e. upon the authority of Rabbins, and not upon any divine the evidence in favour of the hypothesis, given above, is, in miniature, the purport and authorities produced by Mr. Maccalla. Of this work of Mr. J. F. Campbell, Mr. Maccalla boasted as an unanswered and unanswerable performance.

warrant, expressed or implied. And however congenial it may be with the Pedobaptist system to maintain one tradition by another, or to found one human institute upon another human institute, it is altogether repugnant to the spirit and views of the cause which we have espoused. No probabilities will satisfy our consciences in any item of the Christian institution. We can only regard explicit or express divine authority.

2. This proselyte baptism when pleaded as the foundation of John's baptism, flatly subverts the argument of Christ against those who rejected the baptism of John. Those who rejected John's baptism rejected the counsel of God against themselves, not merely the counsel of men, or a traditionary proselyte baptism, such as Mr. Maccalla and his Pedobaptist host would make it. The Saviour taught that John's baptism was from heaven, not from men. It was viewed by his disciples as the counsel of God. If Mr. Maccalla had been amongst those Jews whom the Messiah interrogated as to the origin of John's baptism, whether it was from heaven or from men; had he been superior to the fear of man, he would have said, not from heaven, but from the proselyte baptism of the Jews, Such at least are his views of this baptism now. We object, then, to Mr. Maccalla's views of John's baptism, because he originates it from earth, and not from heaven, because his view of it and that of the Saviour essentially differ.

3. The Pedobaptist writers are themselves the chief, if not the sole polemics, who plead the high antiquity of proselyte baptism; and even of themselves some of the most learned, as Drs. Owen, Lardner, Benson, Jennings, oppose the existence of any such practice, till long after the Christian era. [Here were read extracts from Dr. Gill in proof of the comparatively modern origin of proselyte baptism, too long for insertion.] The Mishna, say some of the most learned antiquarians, written 150 years after the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem, makes no mention of proselyte baptism. In the Jerusalem Talmud, written one century after the Mishna, and in the Babylonish Talmud, written A. D. 500, mention is made of immersion for ceremonial purposes, but their authority is not of sufficient antiquity to affect the question. And here it is worthy to be noted, that these Jewish immersions for ceremonial purposes had no administrators, for the subject was himself the agent, or administrator. Hence those ceremonial purifications are unworthy of comparison with the Christian institution of baptism. It appears to me much more probable that the proselyte washings or immersions were borrowed from John the Baptists, or derived from his baptism, than that John borrowed from the Jews an ordinance which, very probably, did not exist among them till after his decease. But it matters not to us though proselyte baptism came out of Egypt, or from the Red Sea, it was a human institution first and last.

4. Our fourth objection to proselyte baptism as the origin of Christian baptism, is, that if Christian baptism was derived from it, then we should all be obliged to become Quakers; for it is notorious that so soon as a proselyte and his children were once baptized, and thus added to the Jewish church, their descendants through all generations were not to be baptized. Baptism ceased for ever, as a proselyting institution. My opponent's system ends here. If it begins with, or from, proselyte immersion, it ends with it. Consequently, on this hypothesis, baptism was but a temporary institution, and none of the descendants of the Presbyterians, born after the proselytism of their parents, should be baptized.

But this is not the only incongruity in Mr. Maccalla's scheme for the Jews, (he has read to us from Pedobaptist authorities,) made proselytes by circumcision and baptism too: first circumcising, then requiring baptism. Assuredly, then, they did not, like Mr. Maccalla, consider circumcision and baptism of similar import, as the same seals!! &c. One part of Mr. Maccalla's theory defeats another by its "vis inertia?.” Christian baptism one while came in the room of circumcision. Now it is derived from Jewish proselyte immersion, which was so little akin to circumcision as to be married to it in making a proselyte!!! Mr. Maccalla too ought to use God-fathers on the principles of proselyte immersion, as he has read to us from Dr. Wall. The fatherless child baptized as Maimonides says, at the request of his mother—"but the court professed for him." When Mr. Maccalla shall have obviated these difficulties, and removed these objections to his scheme and that of the learned “host” of Pedobaptists who preach up proselyte baptism, we shall propose others. Until then these will suffice.

Having now replied to every thing advanced by Mr. Mac-calla from the commencement of this discussion, bearing directly or indirectly against our views, and having also advanced sundry arguments both as respects the subject and action of baptism, which he has not so much as ventured to impugn, I think I am entitled to say, that I am not only as respondent got up with him, but in the proof of the propositions which I was pledged to prove, I have got considerably ahead of him in the natural stages of this debate. I now proceed to enforce the criticisms presented yesterday on the import of the term baptizo, by showing that eminent Pedobaptists themselves have conceded that for which we have already contended, viz. that the primary and natural meaning of baptisma is immersion, and of bapto and baptizo, I immerse or dip. As we have not carried hither the original works to which we refer, we shall read extracts from them, from our Strictures on Dr. Ralston's Review, pp. 256, 257. If Mr. Maccalla calls in question the correctness of those extracts, we are prepared to defend them.

We shall begin with Calvin. “The very word baptize, signifies to dip; and it is certain that the rite of dipping was observed of the ancient church.” So speaks John Calvin, Just. lib. 4. chap. 15. sec. 19. Let us next hear Martin Luther: his words are, “Baptism is a Greek word, and may be translated a dipping, when we dip something into water, that it may be covered with water; and though it be for the most part almost altogether abolished, for neither do they dip the whole children but only sprinkle them with a little water; they ought, nevertheless, to be wholly dipped, and presently drawn out again, for that the etymology of the word seems to require. I would have those that are to be baptized to be wholly dipped into the water, as the word imports, and the mystery doth signify.”—Tom. 1, fol. 71, and torn. 2, fol. 19.

Lot; is next hear Dr. Owen, “For the original and natural signification of baptizo, it signifies to dip, to plunge, to dye, to wash, to cleanse. That no honest man who understands the Greek tongue can deny the word to signify, to dip.”—Posthumous works, p. 581.

Dr. Hammond says, “Baptismos signifies an immersion or washing the whole body.”—Annot. John xiii. 10.

Bishop Taylor: “If you attend to the proper signification of the word baptism, it signifies plunging into water, or dipping with washing.”—Rule of conscience 3d, c. 4.
Chambers says, “The word baptism is formed from the Greek baptizo of bapto, I dip or plunge. That in the primitive times this ceremony was performed by immersion, as it is to this day in the oriental churches, according to the original signification of the word.”—Quoted by Junius, p. 81.

Casaubon says, “The manner of baptizing was to plunge or dip into the water, as even the word baptizo itself plainly enough shows.”—On Matt. iii. 6.

Zanchius: “It signifies properly to plunge, dip. So the ancient church used to dip those that were baptized.”—Vol. 2. p. 217.

Beza on Matt. iii. 11, says, “The word baptizo signifies to dye by dipping or washing, and differs from the word dunai, signifying to drown, or go down to the bottom as a stone.”

Joseph Mede, on Titus iii. 2, saith, “There was no such thing as sprinkling or rantism used in baptism in the apostles' days, nor many ages after them.”

Dr. MacKnight everywhere in his critical notes affirms the same.

Mr. MacCalla arose: —

My opponent has got far a-head of me, I confess. We travel slowly, but I hope we travel on safe ground, and will safely arrive at our destined point in due time. I am, my friends, pledged to prove us clear of those charges which Mr. Campbell has preferred against us. I am sorry to observe some of you laughing when you should be praying. Do, my Pedobaptist friends, pray for the victory of truth; and fall not in with those jubilees of laughter, which, I am sorry to say, are too much countenanced by Mr. Campbell's manner of handling this serious subject.

When I come forward to the mode of baptism I will show you how many lies there are in those quotations read by Mr. Campbell. Mr. Campbell says that the baptism of John was from heaven. I suppose he will say that Christian baptism was from heaven also. But did not Jesus Christ institute a baptism similar to John's in some respects? and do not many Baptists say that John's baptism and Christian baptism are the same? If so, then it will not be considered by the Baptists that Christian baptism was not from heaven, because borrowed from John. Nor can they, on their own principles, condemn us for saying that John's baptism was from heaven, though borrowed from the proselyte baptism of the Jews, which, indeed, probably was of divine origin at first, since they argue the same way themselves.

But you know that I only said that the argument deduced from proselyte baptism was probable evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism, for if John's baptism was borrowed in part from Jewish proselyte baptism, and if Christian baptism was taken in part from John's baptism, and if the Jews baptized the infants of proselytes, as we have seen they did, then it follows that it is highly probable that the apostles baptized infants. But we go on to shew that we have not only probable, but positive evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.

If, indeed, we do not produce positive evidence of the apostles baptizing infants, we will give up our cause. In producing this sort of evidence, we shall have only to advert to the families baptized by the apostles; of which there are four on record. Previous to taking into consideration the particulars recorded concerning those families, we shall first show that the word oikos, translated house, necessarily implies infants as a part of the family. To do this, I shall read you, from Rice's Pamphleteer, page 36, an extract shewing that in the Septuagint of the Old Testament, and also in the Greek of the New, as well as in the writings of Aristotle and Plato, there are two words translated house and household, viz. oikos and oikia, but of very different meaning; the former denoting literally the house in which the master lived; and the latter, the house in which the servants lived; the former metaphorically signifying a man's children; the latter, his household of servants. So that when we read of an oikos, a house baptized, we know there were infants in it, and when oikia is said to be baptized, we know that it was a family of servants.

[We are sorry that we cannot give the extracts read from Rice in full. Mr. Maccalla read, perhaps at two intervals, three quarters of an hour from this work in support of the above position. We searched every book-store in Pittsburgh for this work, but could not get a copy of it. But we can give a condensed view of the extracts, taken from Dr. Samuel Ralston, who made out this argument against me in his] “Brief Review,” pp. 19, 20. He had Rice before him, and made as judicious a use of it as Mr. Maccalla. Indeed more so, for without the obscene expositions of Mr. Rice, read by Mr. Maccalla, he has given us the cream of the argument. It will also be unnecessary to state that I presented Mr. Ralston's Review at the same time, and replied to Messrs. Rice and Ralston at the same time. As for Mr. Maccalla, he had not “a word of his own” in this criticism. It was all borrowed. But inasmuch as he and Mr. Ralston adopted Rice's and Calmet's criticism, we shall give it in Mr. Ralston's words, and reply to them all at once. A part of it appears in the present speech, and the remainder in the next, as Mr. Maccalla occupied two speeches with this criticism. Mr. Maccalla read also from Campbell's Preliminary Dissertations the rules for finding out the meaning of doubtful words. Diss. 4. Rule 1st. Consult the context in what manner the word is introduced. Second: Consider whether the term be one of the writer's peculiarities. Third: Consult parallel passages. In the fourth place, consult all the places where the term occurs. On these rules Dr. Campbell expatiates, and Mr. Maccalla proposed them with a reference to the investigation of oikos and oikia, and then read from Rice to the following effect, as Mr. Ralston gives it. p. 19. —A. CAMPBELL.

“I would therefore observe that the Greek words oikos and oikia, which literally signify a house or dwelling-place, are used metaphorically both in the Septuagint of the Old, and in the Greek New Testament to denote the inhabitants, with this difference, that oikia signifies a man's household or servants, but oikos is confined to the children separate from the parents, examples of which shall be adduced in the proper place. There may be an instance where these words are used interchangeably, perhaps through the carelessness of transcribers, but every person who will take the trouble of examining the matter, will find that the distinction is accurately observed, particularly in the New Testament.

The reason why oikos is used to denote the children of the owner of a household seems to be this: —That as a house or dwelling-place is built up by degrees, and by successive acts, so a man's family is built up by degrees, by children born to him in succession. In this sense it is used repeatedly in 2 Sam. vii. 25—29. “And now, O Lord God, the word which thou hast spoken concerning his house [οἰκοῦ] establish it Cor ever, and do as thou hast said. And let the house [οἰκὸς] of thy servant David be established before thee. For thou, O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, hast revealed thyself to thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house, [οἰκὸς.] Therefore let it please thee to bless the house [οἰκὸς] of thy servant.” The apostle Peter, speaking of believers as the children, and more immediate family of God here below, uses the word in the same sense, and assigns the same reason respecting the use and propriety of the metaphor. “Ye also as lively stones are built up a spiritual house (οἰκὸς) to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ.” 1 Epistle, ii. 1.

That the word house is used in the Old Testament to designate children separate from their parent or parents, is evident not only from the foregoing, but the following examples: — “Then went king David in, and sat before the Lord, and he said, Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my house [οἰκὸς] that thou hast brought me hitherto?” 2 Sam. vii. 18. “And thus saith the Lord, Behold I will raise up evil against thee [David] out of thine own house” [οἰκοῦ] 2 Sam. xiii. 11. The same phraseology is used in the New Testament. Hence then we read of Cornelius and his house, of Lydia and her house, of the jailer and his house, and of Stephanas and his house, in all of which οἰκὸς and not οἰκία is used. It is true indeed, that the English translators have sometimes rendered both words house, and sometimes household: but, as I have already observed, the distinction is generally observed with accuracy; and certainly it would have been better to have uniformly rendered oikos house, and oikia household, as they have done in Phil. iv. 22. “All the saints salute you, chiefly those that are of Caesar's household,” [οἰκίας] and every one knows that it must have been Caesar's servants, and not his children that are meant in that passage.”

I will, my friends, as I have been reading you some testimonies in support of the meaning of the terms bapto and baptizo, just read you an extract from the Rt. Rev. John Milner. You will find it in my Strictures on Mr. Ralston's Review, p. 279. His words are, p. 316, “Indeed Protestants are forced to have recourse to the tradition of the church for determining a greater number of points which are left doubtful in the sacred text; particularly with respect to the two sacraments which they acknowledge. From the doctrine and practice of the church alone, they learn that though Christ our pattern was baptized in a river, and the Ethiopian eunuch was led by Philip into (he water, for the same purpose the application of it by infusion or aspersion is valid; and that, though Christ said, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, infants are susceptible of the benefits of baptism who are incapable of making an act of faith. “Often we have called infant sprinkling a tradition of popery, and here a high Roman dignitary acknowledges it. Yea, and tells the bishop of St. David's, that from his church alone, Protestants received it!

I am glad my opponent is now about to furnish us with positive evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism. That he has now come to the New Testament, and assumed a tone that indicates something like coming to the point. He will give up his cause if he cannot give a positive evidence of infant baptism.*

His remarks upon your levity appear to me as ill-deserved as his exhortations to groans, and sighs, and Pharisaic faces are incongenial with Christianity.

If Mr. Maccalla subjects himself to your smiles, and provokes your risibility, I cannot see why he should blame you; nor do I see any propriety in his exhorting you to assume a sanctified appearance, and a prayerful countenance, while he manages this discussion in this singular way. We know there is a canting tone and a sorrowful countenance much practiced by those who are most ignorant of the genius of Christianity. We do not plead the cause of levity nor of laughter, but we know that there was nothing more obnoxious to the reproof of Him, who was most certainly the most devout, than the whining, sorrowful tone, and the sanctified exterior of those devotees, once called Pharisees, but which is now greatly extolled by many who inveigh against Pharisaism. A cheerful countenance and a pure

* Mr. Maccalla in his next speech denied his having said that he would rest any tiling upon his proving this point, or that he would give up his cause upon his not proving of any one point; but when asked what he did say, he made no reply.
conscience are necessarily allied, but a good conscience and sighs, and groans, and a dejected prolonged lace, are very incompatible and irreconcilable. We know that there are sorrowful occurrences which may call for tears and sighs, even from the pure in heart, but we cannot conceive of any thing of that nature in the present circumstances of this congregation. But of this enough.

Mr. Maccalla has adopted the criticism of Rice and Taylor on the words oikos and oikia; and is to give us positive evidence of infant baptism from the import of these words. Mr. Ralston, who has written, what he calls a “Brief Review” of the debate at Mount Pleasant, has adopted the same, and mightily boasts of the importance of the criticism. Mr. Maccalla tells us it is founded on the decisions of Aristotle and Plato, and lays the greatest stress upon it. Now we have, not read Rice's Pamphleteer, but we have read some of the writings of Aristotle and Plato in the original, and we have read Dr. Samuel Ralston's “condensed view” of the criticism, and we boldly pronounce that it is a “refuge of lies.” And we will go a little farther yet, and affirm, that not only is the criticism erroneous, but that assertions are made in the “condensed view” referred to, that are downright falsehoods. Mark it well, my friends. We have said falsehoods. Whether intentional or not, is not my duty to sty. But if I do not prove to the satisfaction of every one who understands English, and especially to any one who knows only the Greek alphabet, all that I have now affirmed concerning this criticism and those assertions, I will say that I know neither English nor Greek. But this we will not attempt until Mr. Maccalla gives us the whole of it.

In the meantime we shall request your attention to the households baptized, or “family baptisms,” as some call them, mentioned in the New Testament. Of these there are but four. Of three of these we have positive proof that all baptized were professed disciples; capable of hearing, believing, and obeying the word. The only family that admits of the least hesitation with respect to the members of it, is that of Lydia; and if there had not been another family baptized in the narrative than this one, or if there had been the same want of particularity in describing, incidentally or explicitly, the baptism of the others, it would be utterly impossible for any man living to furnish a positive evidence of infant baptism from Scripture testimony. We have indeed already shown that the apostles baptized none but professed disciples, by facts and arguments that Mr. Macalla dared not to impugn; and therefore might be excused from noticing this ten thousand times refuted notion of infants having been baptized in those four families. But that the fullest satisfaction may be afforded to all interested, we will again condescend to visit the families alluded to.

With respect to Lydia's family, of the circumstances of which there is the least said, and therefore the more room for conjecture, as we see in all the references to it by the Pedobaptists, we will just mention that six things must be proved, before it can be proved from it, that we have positive evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.

1. That Lydia ever had a husband,
2. That she had a husband lately,
3. That she ever had children,
4. That she had brought her children with her from Thyatira to Philippi, a journey of two hundred miles, mostly by sea,
5. That her children were then infants, and
6. That they were actually baptized.

All this must be done before Mr. Macalla's positive evidence can be adduced. Now let me ask, Can Mr. Macalla prove ANY ONE of these circumstances? I positively answer No; not one. Where then is his positive evidence to be obtained from Lydia's house! Indeed there is not probable evidence, much less positive evidence of infant baptism in this family.

While mentioning probable evidence, it may not be out of place to remark, that the highest degree of probable evidence falls something short of positive evidence.
We may, perhaps, be mistaken, but we cannot think that probable evidence in its highest possible degree can produce certainty in the human mind. We are aware that the laws of our country authorise the infliction of the penalty of death upon presumptive evidence of a certain character. How just this procedure may be, lies not in my way to say. But we shall suppose a case, in which we will give every advantage in presumption or probable evidence, and yet we shall see that absolute certainty is not the result. Suppose, for instance, that the ship Albion, in company with a convoy, a thousand miles from land, was boarded on the morning of, say the 20th of June, 1820, and it was found that only two persons, A and B, were alive on board the said ship. That the day being calm, and the sea tranquil, three other ships were within a few furlongs of the ship Albion all day, and saw no person on board the ship during the day. Suppose that it was known to all the ships' crews in the convoy, that A and B, the only surviving sailors on board the ship Albion, were in a state of hostility to each other; that A had actually threatened to kill B, and on boarding the ship Albion at sundown on the 20th of June, it was found that B was actually killed by a sword which was found stained with blood in the said ship. The conclusion would be with many, that A had actually killed B, from all the circumstantial evidence which the case afforded. But an ingenious lawyer appears in defence of A, and admits all the circumstances above stated to have existed, and that it is highly probable that A killed B; at the same time, however, he contends that it is by no means certain that B fell by the hands of A, for he might have fallen into a fit of insanity and killed himself for some reasons unknown to any. The possibility of such an event precludes absolute certainty in any rational mind. Many cases we know have occurred wherein the severest penalties have been awarded on circumstantial evidence, and it afterwards appeared that the sufferer was innocent. If the case which we have supposed does not afford positive evidence, what shall we say of Mr. Macalla's deducing positive evidence in a case wherein there is not a single circumstance stated, which renders it even probable that an infant was in the family! Had we been positively informed that the commission under which the apostles acted, authorized them to baptize infants, and had we been expressly informed, in ten or a dozen instances, that they had baptized infants, even then it would not be probable from all on record, that there was an infant in Lydia's house. But how much more improbable is it, when both the commission, and the apostles' practice, in all cases preclude the idea of an infant ever having been baptized! But just let us look at the circumstances of Lydia's family, and consider what is most probable in the case. First, She shows herself to be the sole proprietor of her house, and precludes the idea of having a husband in these words, Acts xvi. 15. “Come into my house, and tarry with me.” Second, That she was an unmarried woman is probable from the manner of giving the invitation; which, indeed, is the most singular invitation on record, “If ye have judged me faithful to the Lord, come into my house.” It is equivalent to saying, If you have formed a good opinion of my being under subjection to Christ, you will not impeach my modesty, or suppose me actuated by any other motive than the love of my Master, in inviting you to sojourn with a woman. Third, That she was an unmarried woman at this time, is further evident from her manner of life. She was a traveling merchant, and far from her own city. Fourth, It is also probable that the brethren mentioned in the 4th verse, were members of her family, servants or relatives in her employ. Mr. Ralston, indeed, to evade the force of this consideration, supposes that the brethren in this house were Timothy and Luke, and that after Paul and Silas were released from prison, they went to comfort and console them before their departure. But this is absurd, for Paul and Silas did not leave Timothy nor Luke behind them in Philippi: they accompanied Paul and Silas, as we learn xvii. 16, and x. 13. So that the persons mentioned verse 4th, were most probably the members of Lydia's house that with her were baptized.

Thus, from a fair and full consideration of all the circumstances of Lydia's house, there is not the least probability that there was an infant in it. But if even it had been probable that infants belonged to Lydia's house, we are absolutely certified from other portions of the divine testimony that they were not baptized. But all these remarks are perfectly gratuitous; for it behooves my opponent to prove positively that there were infants in this family, and secondly that they were baptized. We are under no necessity, according to the logic and rules of Pedobaptists, to prove that there was not an infant baptized; but they are bound, by their own rules, to prove positively that there was. So Dr. Mason says, “The proof lies upon the affirmer.” Mr. Maccalla affirms that there were infants baptized in Lydia's house: let him prove it then. But it is impossible. Ergo, Mr. Maccalla affirms that which he cannot prove. But we must hear Mr. Maccalla on oikos and oikia.
Mr. MACCALLA proceeds: —

Well, my friends, we shall have to accomplish our object by our sighs and groans, and leave those to smile who please.

I have never heard so much of the great Mr. Campbell, although I have heard a great deal of him, as I have now hoard from himself. His prodigious knowledge of Greek!

It was presumptuous indeed for any person of ordinary attainments to dare to contend with this great man Aristotle and Plato are his playthings; and as for Rice, Ralston, and myself, we are poor puny creatures in his hand—he will tear us to pieces. Well, well, we think Dr. Rice was at least as good and as honest a critic as he. We shall let you hear a little more of his criticism, p. 40th. You will see, my friends, that in establishing the meaning of oikos and oikia, I shall overthrow all my opponent's reasoning on the house of Lydia. As soon as it becomes manifest to you that oikos means a family of children, all his probabilities will dissolve.

Mr. Ralston's condensed view of this argument proceeds thus: “Having thus shewn that the word house is used in both the Old and the New Testament to denote children separate from their parents, I would now observe that it is used to denote little children, as a part of a house or family. Thus in Num. xvi. 27, it is said that Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children.” Verse 32, “And it came to pass that the earth opened her month, and swallowed them up and their houses,” [oikous]—swallowed up their little children as part of their houses, as well as their wives, their sons, and themselves. And not only is this the case, but that it is also used to signify infants exclusively, is apparent from the following examples. According to a law of the Mosaic dispensation, if a married man died childless, then his unmarried brother, and if he had no unmarried brother, then the next of kin was required to marry his widow; and if he refused, “then shall his brother's wife loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and say, So shall it be done to that man who will not build up his brother's house,” [oikon.]—Dent. xxv. 9. But how was his brother's house to be built up? By the surviving brother marrying his deceased brother's widow, and by infants born to him by her, but which were to be esteemed the children of the deceased brother. The marriage of Ruth to Boaz was in consequence of this law: and we are accordingly told, that when he had espoused her, all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said we are witnesses. “The Lord make the woman that is to come into thine house, or dwelling-place, like Rachel, and like Leah, which two did build up the house [oikon] of Israel. And let thy house be like the house [oikos] of Phares which Tamar bare unto Judah of the seed which the Lord will give thee of this young woman.”—Ruth iv. 12. I would again ask, how was the house of Israel built up by Rachel and by Leah? Certainly by the infants brought forth by them from time to time. And how was the house of Boaz to become like the house of Phares, but by infants to be born to him by Ruth, and which are styled “the seed of this young woman?” Many other examples of the word house being used to denote little children, and infants exclusively, might be adduced, but I shall mention only another in Psalm cxiii. 9. “He maketh the barren woman to keep house [oiko], and to be the joyful mother of children.” In this passage, every reader will see that the barren woman’s heart was to be made glad by infants to be given to her by the Lord, and who were to constitute what is called her “house,” or family. Now to apply the metaphorical use of the word house, not only as an argument for, but rather as a proof of infant baptism, we read in the New Testament of the baptism of Lydia and of her house, of the jailer and of his house, and of Stephanas and of his house, or household, as it is translated. The question now is, what did the inspired penmen mean by the word “house,” in the record they have left us of these and of other family baptisms? They were well acquainted with the meaning of the term in the Old Testament, as sometimes signifying children separate from their parents, and little children, and infants exclusively. The Jews to whom they wrote had the same understanding of the word; and if it is necessary, it can be proved that the Greeks attached the same idea to it, when used metaphorically. When the Jews then read that Lydia and her house [oikos]; the jailer and his house [oikos]; and the house [oikos] of Stephanas were baptized, what would they, or what could they understand by the word in those several passages? Would they not attach the same idea which they had been accustomed to affix to it in the Old Testament, namely, a man's or woman's children by immediate descent or adoption, infants included? If, according to the Baptist system, infants are not to be baptized, then the inspired penmen have used a word calculated to deceive both Jews and Greeks; but this is not to be admitted. I cannot conceive of any possible way of evading the argument, but by alleging that they used it in a new and limited sense, as embracing only children arrived to maturity, to the exclusion of infants. But where is the proof of this? An instance or two, if such can be found, of their using it in this sense cannot overturn the argument; for to overturn it, it must be proved that they always used it in that sense. But this I fearlessly affirm cannot be done; and therefore it follows incontrovertibly that they attached the same idea to it as had been affixed by their sacred writers for upwards of two thousand years.

But that the soundness and force of this argument may be still more apparent, I would observe farther, that although there are other Greek words, as pais, paidion, paidarion; brephos, brephullion; nepios, nepion; and teknon and tekna, and which are frequently used in the Septuagint, and in the Greek Testament, to designate little children and infants; yet none of them are used by the writers of the New Testament in the account they have given us of family baptisms. The reason, doubtless, was, that these words are rather indeterminate in their meaning, and are sometimes employed to denote persons approaching, or arrived to maturity, as well as little children and infants. Thus in Gen. xxxvii. 30, Joseph is styled “a child [paidarion] when sixteen years of age; and Benjamin “a little one” [paidion] when upwards of thirty. It was therefore with an evident design that they used a word so fixed and determinate in its meaning by a prescription of two thousand years, that those who read it would not be mistaken, but immediately understand by it, a man's or woman's family, infants included.

I have extracted and condensed the foregoing argument from a pamphlet by a Mr. Taylor, the editor of Calmet's Dictionary. It would seem that Mr. Campbell has either seen that pamphlet, or extracts from it also in Dr. Ely's Quarterly Review, or in the first number of the Pamphleteer, edited at Richmond by Dr. Rice: and as the only possible way of evading the force of this argument, he roundly affirms in pp. 72, 73, 1st edit, that the baptized families mentioned in the 16th chap, of the Acts of the Apostles, and elsewhere, were all adults, and baptized on their own profession of faith.

On Monday we will call your attention, my friends, to the application of this criticism on oikos to the households that were baptized by the apostles. From what you have already heard, it must appear evident that there were infants baptized by the apostles, as the term translated house necessarily implies that infants constituted a part of those houses. Other considerations confirm us in the propriety of this criticism to which we will call your attention on Monday.

[So stood the controversy at the end of the fourth day. — Adjourned to meet on Monday morning at ten o'clock. ]

Monday morning met at eleven o'clock. [There was a pretty general recapitulation of all the arguments adduced during the last week, which is omitted for the sake of brevity; and as the last grand recapitulation which closed the debate will be minutely given, it is thought unnecessary in writing, however useful it might be in speaking, to make a recapitulation on the commencement of every day, or of every new topic. The recapitulations of Mr. Campbell and Mr. Maccalla will be omitted, and proceed to state their second argument for immersion as the only baptism.]

Mr. CAMPBELL arose: —

My friends and brethren, the singular course pursued by Mr. Maccalla obliges me to introduce the different arguments in proof of the positions I am pledged to prove at considerable intervals; but, if after your attention has been engaged upon a variety of topics, tending, no doubt, to the same grand issue, but not so forcibly as if in one grand phalanx, under proper heads, they presented themselves to your view;
if, I say, in this detached way, they appear to carry conviction of the truth to your understandings, it is easy to conceive how much more clear and forcible the impression, if they came forward in succession.

My second argument in proof of the proposition that immersion is the only baptism, is drawn from the design of baptism. Either baptism has a design or it has not. It has a design, Pedobaptists themselves say, and we need not push the proof farther. Now the design of baptism and the action are analogous, Pedobaptists themselves being judges. But whether they say so or not, the Scriptures teach us that there is a meaning in the action of baptism. Hence the figurative use of the term baptism. Thus, said the Messiah long after his literal baptism, “I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished.” This, indeed, the learned and candid Pedobaptist, Dr. George Campbell, translates, “I have an immersion to undergo,” not a sprinkling. The action then has a meaning, and that meaning is as definite as the emblematical import of the element of water, about which there is no controversy. Paul, like our Saviour, uses the term baptism as a word of fixed figurative meaning, 1 Cor. xv. “What shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not.” It is also true that the learned and candid Pedobaptist, Dr. James MacKnight, translates and explains this baptism as an immersion. “What shall they do who are immersed in sufferings for the hope of a resurrection of the dead, if the dead rise not.” The reason of this figurative use of the term baptism is easily accounted for, on the principles offered in our first argument; but on no other. We there shewed that immersion was the primary idea attached to the term baptisma by the people that spake and wrote Greek, consequently, it was as natural for them to use the word baptisma in relation to sufferings or to any thing that was analogous, as it is for us to say such a person is overwhelmed with or in grief: he was immersed in calamities; he is immersed in debt, &c. Now as there is a figurative use of the term baptism this figurative use is founded upon a plain analogy existing between a literal immersion in water, and the circumstances of the person or thing said to be baptized in a figurative sense. This only prepares the way for introducing the design of baptism as far as respects the action. We have, in the illustration and proof of the design and import of this ordinance, while proving our first position, shown that washing away of sins was the doctrinal import of the ordinance, viewed in relation to the subject of it. As the forgiveness of sins springs from the death of the Saviour, as “he was delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification,” so it was meet, in the divine wisdom and goodness, that the action which he has commanded to be observed, in order to the formal remission of sins, should have such an analogy to the grand events which conspired together in procuring pardon and acceptance as to fix upon the mind of the subject, and to exhibit to all observers, the grand means of obtaining this remission and acceptance, viz. the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Hence the apostle, in his epistles, declares that disciples are buried in baptism, and also raised in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection. Baptism is therefore analogous to a burial and resurrection, as far as respects the action, and in consequence of this analogy the subject is said to have died by sin, to have been buried with Christ, and to have risen with him. MacKnight, the Pedobaptist translator and commentator, so correctly represents the emblematical import of the action of baptism, that we will express our views in his words. Introduction to Rom. vi. he has these words,” In baptism the baptized person is buried under the water as one put to death with Christ on account of sin, that he may be strongly impressed with a sense of the malignity of sin, and excited to hate it as the greatest of evils. Moreover, in the same rite, the baptized person, being raised up out of the water, alter being washed, he is thereby taught that he shall be raised from the dead with Christ, by the power of the Father, to live with him for ever in heaven, provided he is prepared for that life by true holiness. Farther, believers are laid under the strongest obligations to holiness by baptism, because it represents their old man, their old corrupt nature, as crucified with Christ, to teach them that their body, which sin claimed as its property being put to death, was no longer to serve sin as its slave.”* On the third verso, chap. vi. he observes, “Baptism

* That baptisma literally signifies immersion, and that its literal import is the meaning that it must have in relation to the ordinance, is supported by a very singular and convincing evidence. All learned Baptists, and amongst these doubtless there are some honest men, declare it, and deny its signifying sprinkling or pouring. In the second place, hundreds of the most learned Pedobaptists say the same. In the third place, almost all ecclesiastical historians declare that immersion was the primitive practice. And what is opposed to all this evidence? Only the cavils of a few modern Pedobaptists, who have written on set purpose of proving their own practice to be right. And of these some have so much honesty and modesty as to avow that it most frequently signifies immersion. But not one has been able to furnish one instance of its necessarily signifying sprinkling or pouring. Nor, indeed, can any man produce one such instance. The force of such concurring testimony on any subject is, we would think, irresistible, and were it not for prejudice, and bigotry, and interest, it would be in every instance triumphant. In many instances it is so in spite of opposition. is an emblematical representation of our union with Christ as members of his body, and of the malignity of sin in bringing death upon Christ and upon all mankind, and of the efficacy of Christ's death in procuring for all a resurrection from the dead.” On verse 5, he observes, “our baptism, called in the precedent clause a planting together in the likeness of his death, being both a memorial of Christ's death and resurrection, and a prefiguration of our own, it teaches us we shall die indeed through the malignity of sin, as Christ died; but through the merit of his death, and the efficacy of his power as Saviour, we shall at the last day be raised from the dead as he was, to live with him, and with God eternally.” On Col. ii. 12, he observes, “Christ's disciples are fitly said to be buried with Christ in baptism; and in baptism to be raised with him.” Such are the ideas which the action of baptism (sophistically called the mode) suggests. It is an emblematical burial and resurrection. So all the ancients interpreted it. Cut Paul's authority satisfies the conscience of a disciple of Christ, though all opposed.

The design of baptism requires that the action should bear a resemblance to a burial and resurrection. But sprinkling bears no such resemblance, therefore sprinkling is not baptism. Bread and wine are not more suitable emblems of Christ's body and blood, used in the ordinance of the supper, than baptism, in its primitive administration, is of the burial and resurrection of Christ, and of our burial and resurrection with him by faith, and also of our literal burial and resurrection unto eternal life.

The answer of a good conscience arising from baptism, not only implies that the subject of baptism should be a believer, but also has reference to the action of baptism. This answer of a good conscience arises from a knowledge of forgiveness and acceptance through the death and resurrection of Christ presented to our view in the action of baptism, as the apostle Peter represents it, when declaring that baptism is the antitype of the deluge, or of the salvation of Noah by water. 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21."

Mr. MacCalla arose: —

My friends, when we adduced probable evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism, from the history of proselyte

* As we always prefer, when it is practicable, to refute the glosses of Pedobaptists by Pedobaptists themselves, we shall transcribe
baptism, as practised among the Jews, it was not as Mr. Campbell has hinted, that we should fix our practice of this rite upon the principles of proselyte baptism. No, we have other and better ground for our practice than this. We have now positive evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism; and there is no occasion for our founding our practice upon probable evidence when we have positive evidence to support it. Alexander the Great rode on horseback without stirrups, because that stirrups were not then invented, nor for many centuries afterwards; but this is no reason why modern kings and conquerors should ride without stirrups, now that stirrups are invented. Just so we have no occasion for founding our practice upon proselyte Jewish baptism, when we have better ground.

We have produced substantial criticism to show that the MacKnight's notes on this passage. It thus reads: “The water of baptism is here called the antitype to the water of the flood, because the flood was a type or emblem of baptism, in the three following particulars. 1st. As by building the ark and by entering into it, Noah showed a strong faith in the promise of God, concerning his preservation by the very water which was to destroy the antediluvians for their sins; so by giving ourselves to be buried in the water of baptism, we show a like faith in God's promise, that though we die and are buried, he will save us from death, the punishment of sin, by raising us from the dead at the last day. 2nd. As the preserving of Noah alive, during the nine months he was in the flood, is an emblem of the preservation of the souls of believers, while in the state of the dead; so, the preserving believers alive, while buried in the water of baptism, is a prefiguration of the same event. 3rd. As the water of the deluge destroyed the wicked antediluvians, but preserved Noah, by bearing up the ark in which he was shut up, till the waters were assuaged and he went out of it to live again on the earth; so baptism may be said to destroy the wicked, and to save the righteous, as it prefigures both these events: the death of the sinner it prefigures by the burying of the baptized person in the water; and the salvation of the righteous, by raising the baptized person out of the water to live a new life.” These things considered, may not our Lord's words to Nicodemus, except a man be born again of water, be an allusion to the history of the deluge, and a confirmation of its typical meaning? For Noah's coming forth from the water to live again on the earth, sifter having been full nine months in the water, might fitly be called his being born of water. Consequently, as baptism is the antitype, or thing signified by the deluge, a person's coming out of the water of baptism, may have been called by our Lord, his being born again of water.

This is a solid refutation of Mr. Ralston's remarks, p. 95, on the mode of baptism as deducible from 1 Pet. iii. 21.
word oikos implies the existence of children in a family, in contradistinction from their parents; and that oikia denotes a household of servants, in contradistinction from the house or family of the proprietor; and that, therefore, when an oikos was baptized, we know certainly that children were baptized. As therefore the houses or families that were baptized are called oikos and not oikia, we have positive evidence that infants were baptized by the apostles.

In confirmation of this, we shall attend to the circumstances of the houses baptized by the apostles. On the family of Lydia we have heard much said, and much that ought not to have been said, as about her not having a husband, her not having children, and if she had, the improbability of her having them at Philippi, so far from home, and that if she had them with her, still there is want of proof that they were baptized. But there is no weight in such conjectures. We are told that herself and all her house were baptized, and we have seen that oikos implies children. She might have been a widow, or she might not, for any thing I know; but one thing I know, she had a family, and that her family was baptized. And upon the ground of conjecture, I do not think it a fair conjecture to suppose that she was an unmarried woman and a family of men and women with her. Who were these men and women? It is presumed they were her servants and relations. But this is all conjecture, and rather than admit such conjectures I would prefer to rest upon the meaning of the word translated house, and necessarily implying children.

The jailer and his oikos were baptized. That there were infants in this house is very evident, not only from the import of the word which we have proved to be decisive, but from the circumstances narrated by Luke, Acts xvi. 1st. None, but the jailer was commanded to believe, which shows his house was incapable of believing. Mr. Campbell knows that the verb pisteuson is in the singular number, and addressed to the jailer only. 2nd. None but the jailer is said to have believed. The participle is also singular pepieteukoos, he having believed. This Conn of address, and this form of narrative plainly teach us that none but the jailer was commanded to believe, and that none but he actually believed, consequently his children were baptized upon his (kith. 3rd. he was a young man and could not have adult children, for the Roman law prohibited old men from being jailers; and this also appears from his activity, he sprang in, and moved about with the agility of youth, and not as one bowed down with the infirmities of old age.

Cornelius' house was also baptized. It is admitted that the Holy Ghost fell on the kinsmen and neighbours who met in this family, but it by no means follows that the family of Cornelius, his oikos believed. The message of the angel who visited him presents him in the same relation to his house as the jailer occupied. “Send for Simon Peter, and he will tell thee, not thy children, words by which thou and thy house will be saved.” His children, like those of the jailer, were put under the means of salvation by baptism, but it does not hence follow that they were actual believers.*

Of the other families baptized not many particulars are given, but we see from those considered that infants were a

* As we have promised animadversions on the Rev. Samuel Ralston's Review of the Debate at Mount Pleasant, and as the remarks of Mr. Maccalla on the households baptized were kindred to those of Mr. Ralston upon this topic, it will be an act of justice on all sides to give the following extract from p. 23. “That the real meaning of the apostle may be seen in this passage, it may be necessary to observe that the word salvation, like many other words in the Scriptures, is used by the sacred penmen in two or three different meanings or acceptations. Sometimes it is used to signify a deliverance from temporal danger only. This is its meaning in Exod. xiv.
13, where Moses speaking of that deliverance which Jehovah was about to vouchsafe to the Israelites, in the destruction of their enemies, the Egyptians, says to the former, “Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord which he will shew to you today.” As it respects spiritual objects and interests, it is sometimes used to signify the ordinances of the true religion. This, I apprehend, is its meaning in John iv. 22, where Christ tells the woman of Samaria “That salvation is of the Jews.” And it sometimes means that pardon of sin, sanctification of heart, and eternal life, which is promised to all true believers in Christ. This is its meaning in Rom. i. 16, where the apostle says, “I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first and also to the Greek.”

That it is salvation in this full and unlimited sense that Mr. Campbell intends in this proposition, will I expert be admitted: indeed no ether kind of salvation, nor any salvation less than this, would answer his purpose, as he contends that a profession of this salvation is what alone can entitle an adult to baptism. This salvation, as it regards adults, is promised to believers only: “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but be that believeth not shall be damned.”
component part of those baptized. Besides many families were baptized that are not recorded, for baptism of households was a very common thing in the apostles' time, as we learn from I Cor. i. 16, where Paul says, I baptized the household of Stephanas, but I do not know whether I baptized any other, that is, any other households; which shews that the baptism of households was so common a thing that the apostle Paul could not tell how many he had baptized at Corinth.

Now every tyro in the Greek language knows, that the verb "pisteuson," believe, in this verse, is in the singular number, and was addressed to the jailer only, and not to his house or family. As they were all adults, according to Mr. Campbell's inference, then Paul did not preach this full salvation to them, unless he preached a salvation that may be obtained without believing, or that the children can be saved by the faith of the parent. But as neither of these can be admitted, the question now is, what did he mean by the word "saved" in that verse, as it had reference to the jailer's family? The apostle Peter answers the question in the 3rd chapter of his 1st Epistle, 23rd verse, where he tells us that baptism is a figure, or rather an antitype ["antitupon"] of the deliverance of Noah and his house "by water," and not surely by being immersed in it, (for that was the case with the antediluvians) but by being borne up by it in the ark, the type of the church—"the like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us." Not that we are to understand the apostle as teaching (hat baptism is regeneration, or yet a seal of an interest in the salvation purchased by Christ, to either adults or infants, until they bring forth "the answer of a good conscience toward God," as the fruit of a living faith in a risen Saviour; but as one of the means appointed by the Head of the church, for interesting in that salvation, and for communicating those renewing influences of the Holy Spirit, without which no one can behold his face in glory. That this is his meaning is apparent from his advice to the Jews on the day of Pentecost. "Be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost: for the promise is to you and to your children, and to all who are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." By thus bringing Peter and Paul together, we learn what the latter meant by the word saved, as it respected the jailer's family, in the verse now under consideration. That by his believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, they would be brought under baptism as a means of salvation, together with the other means connected with it, and which we are afterwards told was the case. Thus a due attention to the true import of the words "believe" and "saved," in that verse, shews the fallaciousness of Mr. Campbell's proposition, "that Paul preached salvation in its full extent to the jailer and his house;" and the inference deduced from it, that they were adult believers, and baptized on their own profession of faith, consequently fails to the ground."
Mr. CAMPBELL then arose; —

The time has fully come when it becomes my duty, from a promise already given you, my friends, to prove that this new discovery made on purpose to aid the falling cause of infant baptism is a refuge of lies. I have said that it is a refuge of lies. Many seek shelter in such refuges without knowing them to be such; perhaps this was the case with Mr. Ralston and my opponent. Be this as it may, we are sure it is a refuge of lies, and that the alleged differences between oikos and oikia is not only an erroneous criticism, but that statements made concerning these terms are absolutely false. Whether intentional or not, lies not in my way to judge or to express. We are only concerned in what is said, on the present occasion, and not in the motive or design of the speaker or writer. I then positively assert, that in the Bible, there is no more difference between the use and application of the words oikos and oikia than there is between the words brothers and brethren. I suppose you all know that the difference between the words brothers and brethren is only in the orthography or spelling of the words, and that there is no difference in the sense. Now for the proof. Paul says, I Cor. i. 16, “I baptized the oikos of Stephanas,” and in the same epistle, addressed to the same church, in speaking of the same family, chap. xvi. 15, he calls this family the oikia of Stephanas. “Ye know,” says he, “the household [ten oikian] of Stephanas, that it is the first fruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints.” Here the same family, by the same writer, is called, in the same letter, both oikos and oikia. Any person that knows the Greek alphabet can see that this is as I have said. Where now is the truth of Mr. Ralston’s declaration, p. 19. “Hence,” says he, “when we read of Cornelius and his house, of Lydia and her house, of the jailer and his home, and of Stephanas and his house, in all of which oikos and not oikia is used.” He says, not oikia is used, but here I have shown that it is! This proves the assertion false.

And that you may evidently see that it is erroneous, we have only to observe that Mr. Ralston, and Mr. Rice, and Mr. Maccalla say that oikia denotes servants, as the servants of Cesar’s household [okias] as Mr. Ralston quotes it; and then so to translate it whenever it occurs.* Thus said Paul, chap. i. I baptized the infants \(oikos\) of Stephanas, and chap. xvi. ye know the servants \(oikia\) of Stephanas that they were the first fruits, &c. and thus make the apostle give a representation of Stephanas as a father in one place, as a slaveholder or master in another; having servants, that were not servants but freemen, addicting themselves to the service of the saints, when they were their master's property, and having no time at their own disposal. What contradictions and inconsistencies appear in a bold advocate of this human tradition!†

But that \(oikos\) and \(oikia\) are applied in the Bible to the self-same family, and to the self-same house, will appear from a few references. I would only premise one remark, viz. that the difference betwixt the families called \(oikos\) and those called \(oikia\) is pleaded upon the allegation that \(oikos\) literally denotes the dwelling-place of the master or father of the house, and that \(oikia\) denotes the house, cabin, or but in which the servants or slaves lived. It is said that in their figurative application the same difference exists. As \(oikos\) signifies the master's dwelling-house, it figuratively denotes his children: and as \(oikia\) denotes the servant's house, it figuratively denotes the servants that lived in it. The jailer's house is called, Acts xvi. 31, \(oikos\); in verse 32 it is called \(oikia\), and in verse 34, it is again called \(oikos\). Once here it appears evidently to refer to the family, “Thou shall be saved and thy house.” “They spake the word of the Lord to all that were in his house” [\(oikia\)]. This evidently refers to the house literally considered. And verse 34, “he lead them into his house,” \(oikos\) the place of abode. Put whatever meaning we may fix to the word, it affects not

* Messrs. Ralston and Maccalla will, it seems, advocate the baptism of a believer's servants and children on the profession of the master of the house, for both agree that the household of Stephanas was baptized on his profession, and Mr. Ralston explicitly declares, p. 26, that the apostle had, in chapter xvi. reference to the servants of Stephanas.

†Mr. Pond and Mr. Ralston are at variance here. Mr. Pond will have it, that the children of Stephanas had, at the time of writing the epistle, grown up to manhood, and had obtained grace to addict themselves to the ministry of (he saints. “When,” says he,” the apostle wrote this, they had been baptized a number of years.” Messrs.. Ralston and Maccalla will make servants of Stephanas' household!!
the point for which we contend; for the fact still remains, and it is undeniable that the jailer’s house is called both an oikos and an oikia.

Mr. Macalla, or rather Mr. Ralston, from whom the criticism is taken, aware that oikia is applied to the jailer’s house as well as oikos, will have it, contrary to appearance of probability, used metaphorically, and says that it means the jailer’s servants, to whom he spake the word of the Lord. This is an evident assertion to suit the hypothesis. But suppose we should admit it for the sake of argument, then how does it stand? It stands thus, he preached to the servants, and baptized only the oikos, the infants!! The oikia was not baptized, but the oikos was. Paul and Silas, then, were more successful in disciplining the oikos than the oikia, Mr. Ralston’s infants; they were more easily converted than the servants! They spake the word of the

* During the discussion we referred indefinitely to many instances of the application and use of oikos and oikia, expressly subversive of the recent discovery. We shall, for the sake of giving sufficient data to explode this absurd criticism, here register more circumstantially and methodically a number of plain evidences or proofs of its falsehood. We shall first show that oikos and oikia are used by the inspired penmen of the New Testament as complete synonymies. The Centurion’s house, whose faith was so famed, and whose servant the Messiah cured, is by Luke, in chap. vi. 6, called oikia, and in verse 10th, it is called oikos. The same house is by Matthew called oikia, chap. vii. 6, Jairus, the ruler of the Synagogue, whose daughter the Messiah brought to life, had a house which Luke calls oikos, chap. viii. 41; and in the same chapter, verse 51, he calls the same house oikia. Mark calls the same house oikos, chap. v. 38, and Matt, calls it oikia, chap. v. 23. In the parable concerning the house divided against itself, which is recorded by Matthew, Mark, and Luke, it is called oikia, Matt. xii. 25; oikia, Mark iii. 25, but it is called oikos epi oikon, Luke xi. 17. In the parable concerning the house being attacked by thieves, recorded by Matthew and Luke, Matthew calls it oikia, chap. xxiv. 43, and Luke calls the same house oikos, chap. xii 39. The same house is called both oikos and oikia in the same verse, Luke x. 5. Into whatever house (oikia) ye enter, say, Peace be to this house (oikos) The Messiah calls his Father’s house both oikos and oikia, John ii. 16; xiv. 2. The house of Martha and Mary is called oikos, John xi. 20, and, in the same chapter, it is called oikia, verse 31. These few instances selected from the four gospels only, will show how much dependance ought to be placed on such critics, the very foundation of whose criticisms is laid in a falsehood, viz. that oikos and oikia literally signify a house, but not the same kind of a house. We have produced from the very portion of the Bible where they say this distinction is observed with the greatest accuracy, unit equivocal evidences that both words are used to denote the same kind of a house. Many instances more can be produced.

We shall expose the fallacy of this new discovery a little farther. These sagacious doctors of divinity say, that oikia literally signifies the servants' house, and metaphorically signifies the servants themselves. Thus Dr. Ralston, “oikia signifies a man’s household or servants.” Let us test the correctness of this assertion, Matt. x. 12. “Salute the house when ye enter it,” [oikia] i. e. salute the servants only. Matt. x. 13,” If the house [oikia] be worthy,” i. e. the servants. Matt. xii. 25, “Every house divided,” [oikia] i. e. servants divided come to desolation. The Centurion, whose son Jesus healed, John iv. 50, believed with all his house, [oikia _ole*] i. e. all his servants only believed. Matt. iii. 57,” A prophet hath no honour in his own house;” [oikia] i. e. among his slaves or servants. Joshua said, “As for me and my house [oikia] we will serve the Lord,” i. e. myself and my servants. “Receive him not into your house” [oikia] i. e. into your kitchen among your servants. “In every great house [oikia] there are vessels of gold and silver,” &c. i. e. in every great hut or cabin. “In my Father’s house [oikia] are many mansions.” I forbear to expose this criticism farther. Hundreds of instances similar to those adduced can be given.

But we must not pass by the most important point, viz. that _oikos_ signifies sometimes children, and even infants, apart from their parents. And what of this, ye sagacious critics! The word family in English, very often signifies the same thing! But does that prove anything favourable to your hypothesis? I So long as the word family, which you say is the meaning of _oikos_, frequently denotes all that live under one father, mother, master, or mistress, whether infants or adults, so long it remains to be determined, from the circumstances of the case, who are the constituents or members of the family; and thus, after all your boasted discovery, you have to confess yourselves to be just where you were: unable to prove that there ever was an infant in any house, _oikia_, or family that was baptized. But you intend to carry some point by the discovery, and we know of nothing you could propose, except to lead captive the ignorant and unwary admirers of the patented priesthood. For, gentlemen, you must know that _oikos_ and _oikia_ are used interchangeably in all books, and by all Greek writers, if you know any thing of Greek; and you must know, if you have read the Septuagint of the Old Testament, that _oikos_ hundreds of times is applied to denote every kind of house or family. The very first time it occurs is Gen. vii. 1, where Noah is commanded to take all his house into the ark, _oikos_. Now we all know that Noah's _oikos_ was composed of three other _oikoi_, and that each of these _oikos_ was composed of adults: four _oikoi_ composed [pas o oikos] all the house of Noah. The youngest child or infant in this house _oikos_ was about ninety-eight years old.
“But Paul commanded only the jailer to believe, and he only believed, because we find pisteusan and pepisteukoos in the singular number.” Admirable grammarians! Believe thou, and thou shalt be saved and thy house upon thy faith. Thyself by thy personal faith, and thy children by proxy, or by some sort of federal representation. This is the result

This same oikos occurs fourteen times in the first chapter of Numbers, and includes, under twelve occurrences, 603, 550 adults, from twenty years and upwards. And so extremely far from truth and correctness is this criticism, that we can furnish instances where oikos signifies a man's servants. Thus Gen. xvii, 27, all the men of Abraham's house oikos, of which there were three hundred and eighteen servants born in his oikos were circumcised when Abraham's eldest son was thirteen years old. Observe, not oikia household, but oikos house! But observe, God said of Abraham, he will order his children [huhuioi], and his household oikos; yes, oikos, his servants, not oikia. Joseph was placed over the house of Pharaoh [oikos], i. e. over all his servants, noble and ignoble, Gen. xli. 40. Solomon gave Hiram 20,000 measures of wheat, and 20 measures of pure oil every year, for the use, for the annual consumption of his oikos. Assuredly Hiram must have had many infants to consume all this!! Again, the whole house of Jacob is sometimes called oikos, and pan oikia, Gen. i. 22; xlvi. 31, &c. &. c.

To round off this bold period of learned criticism, Mr. Ralston adds, “It is true indeed, that the English translators have sometimes rendered both words house, and sometimes household, but the distinction is generally observed with accuracy,” (mark this) and, adds he, “certainly it would have been better to have uniformly rendered oikos house, and oikia household, as they have done (once) Phil. iv. 22. Now, courteous reader, do not be startled when I tell you that it is a fact that our translators, in the New Testament, have only once translated oikia household, and oikos three times; and that of forty-three times household in the English Old Testament, forty-one times it is oikos in the Septuagint, and only twice oikia!! When this is denied, we shall give chapter and verse. So speaks the Pedobaptist, and so speaks fact. Now judge ye.

Thus I have shewn that the whole of this criticism is a mere fabrication of an overweening imagination, say the best of it. Were it necessary I could fill from classical authority a respectable pamphlet of refutations of this miserable refuge. But as the Old and New Testament were only referred to in this point, I confined myself exclusively to them. I have embodied in this note some of my remarks in the speech under which it stands, and have added several instances to those then introduced, and design it to stand here as a refutation of Taylor's, Rice's, Ralston's, and Maccalla's new theory of positive proof. I should except Mr. Ralston, for he only calls the argument derived from the family baptisms “presumptive evidence” of apostolic practice. Mr. Maccalla presumes a little farther, and calls it positive proof; we will call it positive proof of positive presumption. —A. C.
of so great erudition! To elude the exposure of this false criticism, Mr. Ralston will have two kinds of salvation preached here, the one an eternal salvation, and the other neither temporal nor eternal, but only the means of salvation. Thus the apostle Paul is represented as speaking like pagan priests, with double tongue or a double meaning. “Believe in the Lord, and thou shall be saved, and thy house.” These learned Rabbins have found out that Paul had two meanings for the word saved in this place, and thus cheated the jailer by the ambiguity of a word. For Dr. Ralston and my opponent, who agrees with him, will have Paul to mean, “Believe in the Lord, O jailer, and thou shall be saved with an everlasting salvation, and thy house shall be put under the means of salvation! But if we should condescend to such puerile perversions, and seriously reply to such unparalleled misconstructions, we would say that a knowledge of the first principles of any language, of the commonest of all things in the praxis of school boys,—the supplying of ellipsis would, should, or ought to cause to blush any adult who pretends to understand grammar, and move especially any one who pretends to know a little Greek, who would make such a criticism. Let the ellipsis be supplied, and then it reads, “O jailer, you are concerned only for your own personal safety, and therefore you ask nothing for your family or your friends: you only ask, What shall I do to be saved.” But we will tell you good tidings, not only in answer to the question which you have proposed for yourself, “Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shall be saved,” and not only thyself, but in a similar way thy house. Briefly and grammatically thus, “Believe thou and thou shall be saved, and let thy house believe and they shall be saved;” and accordingly the house was assembled, and they spake the word to him, and to all that were in his house. And he rejoiced, having believed in God, and all his house having likewise believed, rejoiced with him; not as having escaped the earthquake (as Mr. Ralston affirms), but as having found pardon and acceptance in the Messiah. Nothing is more common in Greek or Latin writers than such a style. The New Testament abounds with it. Thus John iv. 53. —The ruler believed, and all his house [supply] believed. Acts xviii. 8. Crispus the chief ruler of the synagogue believed, with all his house; i.e. all his house believed with him. Acts xi.
ON BAPTISM.

14, who will tell thee words by which thou shall be saved and thy house, i. e. and by which thy house shall be saved. For the word saved is used in the same sense in relation to the Centurion and his house, and not as Mr. Ralston asserts that it signifies one thing when applied to the Centurion, and another when applied to his house. It is quite in the style of the New Testament to answer a question in the number in which it is proposed, and then to add to the reply other intelligence connected therewith. Thus when the Jews on the day of Pentecost asked in the plural number what they should do, Peter answered their question first, in relation to themselves, but immediately added information which they did not demand. “The promise is unto you,” might have sufficed to answer their query; but he adds, “and to your children, and to all that are afar off; even to as many as the Lord our God shall call.” Just so in the case of the jailer, he inquires concerning himself, and he is answered first as respects himself, then he is informed concerning his house. I feel almost ashamed to attempt to refute, by serious argument, such boyisms as appear in these criticisms. I have corrected school boys for blunders less egregious. The positive proof of apostolic practice of infant baptism remains to be produced. Indeed the probable evidence has not yet been produced.

Mr. MACCALLA proceeds: —

So then Mr. Campbell has proved Mr. Rice's criticism and Mr. Ralston's remarks upon it to be false. Who is this Mr. Campbell, and who is Dr. Rice? I suppose you know pretty well who the former is, and as to the latter I will tell you. Dr. Rice is so respectable as a scholar and as a Christian that he was once elected to be president of Princetown college, and declined accepting the honourable appointment. Yet you would suppose him to be some novice who was ignorant of the first principles of grammar, from the unmerciful castigation he has just now received. Notwithstanding all you have heard about his palpable blunders, we will yet prefer him as a critic, to the great Mr. Campbell. And as for father Ralston, for bo I must still call him, although so destitute of moral principle, while Mr. Campbell has laboured to fasten down upon him false assertion, I think he has fixed upon my opponent's book not only one, but sundry falsehoods. This you will see by and by.

As for the household of Stephanas being called both oikos and oikia; this is noticed by Dr. Rice, and I think by Ralston, although the latter has once declared that oikos and not oikia is always found where houses are said to be baptized, p. 26, he says, “There is a difficulty not only in the grammatical structure of that passage, but in the directions given by the apostle relative to that house, that has perplexed expositors and commentators. The difficulty, however, as far as it respects the point in debate, vanishes in a moment, when we consult the original text. When Paul tells us, chap. i. 16, that he baptized the household of Stephanas, as it is translated, the word used is oikos; but in the passages now under consideration it is oikia, which is a proof that he had reference, not to the children, but to the servants of Stephanas. Their being styled the first fruits of Achaia, is a proof that they were converted to the Christian faith at the same time with their master, and this circumstance, together with the character for kindness given of Stephanas himself, in the following verse, accounts for their addicting themselves to the ministry or service of the saints; and hence it follows that the house of Stephanas alluded to in I Cor. i. 16, is to be classed with the house of Cornelius, of Lydia, and of the jailer.”

[Mr. Maccalla read also from Dr. Rice to the same effect.) The whole difficulty on this passage, and also on the oikia mentioned in relation to the jailer, vanishes upon the principle here stated, viz. that the oikos only is said to have been baptized upon the faith of the father.

But, my friends, I have not founded my argument for apostolic practice of infant baptism simply upon this criticism. Nor do I, as Mr. Campbell has said, rest my whole cause upon it. No; no more than when I use the words father Ralston, do I mean to call any man father or master on earth, and submit with deference to his opinions. But I will honour the aged men as fathers, and I will just rest so much of my cause upon the aforesaid criticism as it will bear. I still contend that it is an important criticism, and not to be relinquished. But I say that the circumstances recorded concerning those baptized families furnish very decisive evidence that there were infants in them. And as we plainly see that the members of those families were baptized upon the faith of the parents, we are thereby confirmed that there were no adults among them; for if there had been adults, and they had believed, we should have been told of it as minutely as we are of the faith of the jailer, the piety of Cornelius, and the devotion of Lydia.

“But,” as Mr. Ralston says, p. 27, “after all, deep-rooted prejudice may say that we are not told that there were any little children or infants in those houses. In reply to this I would ask the most prejudiced and prepossessed, if they can possibly suppose that the inspired penman would use a word that not only embraces little children as a part of a family, but is used to denote infants exclusively, if he knew that there were no infants in those houses, or if he knew that infants were not to be baptized. On the contrary, is not his using such a word a proof that he knew that there were infants in those houses: and of the houses of Lydia and the jailer he had a personal knowledge, for, as we have shewn, he was at Philippi when they were baptized.

“But besides this, I will state a plain case, which has indeed been stated by others, and which I think will decide the question to every person who will be at the trouble of making the experiment. We are told that Cornelius, Lydia, the jailer, and Stephanas were themselves baptized, and their families also. Now let a list of all the families in any given district be taken. Let that list be presented to a person entirely unacquainted with them; and let him select four families promiscuously out of that list; and then let (lie inquiry be made, whether there is, or is not, a little child or infant in any of those families. I have no hesitation in saying, that out of a hundred selections or trials, there would be found a minor child or infant in some one of them, for one selection where no such child would be found. Every person versed in the science of calculation will immediately see that in the case now stated, there is not only a hundred, but hundreds against one.”

Mr. Campbell thinks he has proved his point; I think I have proved mine: we shall then leave you to judge betwixt us and proceed to the mode of baptism.

In discussing the mode or manner of administering baptism, I will observe the following method.

1. I will attend to the words used in relation to this rite,
2. I will advert to the cases of baptism recorded.
3. I will consider the spiritual allusions to this ordinance, contained in the apostolic epistles.

1. As to the meaning of the words used in relation to this ordinance, we shall first read from the Debate at Mount Pleasant, p. 253, “The Greek language was the most finished language ever spoken on earth; the most copious, the most definite, the most musical. It was happily over ruled in infinite wisdom and goodness, that it should be the language in which the gospel or New Testament should be written and handed to the church. With respect to its copiousness and precision in regard to the use of water for cleansing, we have to observe, that it had no less than four distinct verbs, with their compounds, in common use. There is lotto to wash, in general, the summum genus; nipto, properly to wash the hands; raino and rantizo, to sprinkle or asperse, and bapto or baptizo to dip, plunge, or immerse. Now, as in English, we never use “to dip” to signify the same as “to sprinkle,” so never does raino in Greek signify bapto, nor bapto raino.” Now we shall admit the copiousness of the Greek language without reserve, but at the same lime we contend that baptizo, the principle word of controversy, whatever may have been its general or more common meaning amongst the Greek profane writers, is, in the sacred dialect, used to denote, not only one mode of applying water, but different modes of using it; and in proof of this we shall produce the apostle Paul, who in his epistle to the Hebrews, speaks of different kinds of baptism. His words are diaphorois baptismois, chap. ix. 10, literally different baptisms. Now as the important question before us, is, in what sense the word baptisma and baptizo are used in scripture when applied to religious ordinances, we shall, I think, do justice to the inquiry by examining what modes of applying water in religious usage the apostle calls baptisms. In ascertaining this we have only to refer to those applications of water alluded to by the apostle, Heb. ix. 10.

And first, the priests had their hands and feet washed before they entered the tabernacle, or approached the altar, Ex. xxx, 18—21, “Thou shall also make a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shall put water therein. For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat; when they go into the tabernacle of the congregation, they shall wash with water, that they die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord: so they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not: and it shall be a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his seed throughout their generations.” Ami in chap. xl. 31, 32, “And Moses and Aaron and his sons washed their hands and their feet thereat: when they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they washed as the Lord commanded Moses.” This baptism of the priests was performed by aspersion. For they were not to wash in but only at this laver, The baptism of consecration was performed at the door of the tabernacle before the people, and as the Jews stripped before they immersed, it cannot be supposed that this baptism of consecration could be performed in any other way than by affusion or aspersion. Then there was no way of immersing the priests at the door of the congregation, for the later of brass did not stand at the door of the congregation, but between the door and the altar. And we are positively informed that the Levites were consecrated by sprinkling, see Num. viii. 6, 7, “Thus, saith the Lord, shall thou do unto them, to cleanse them: Sprinkle water of purifying upon them.” It is therefore fairly inferred that Aaron and his sons were thus consecrated.

In the next place, the “diverse baptisms” mentioned by Paul include the numerous aspersions under the Levitical law; for of these he takes notice, Heb. ix. 13, 14, “For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?”

In the third place, to the “diverse baptisms” amongst the Jews we must add that kind of religious washing, which, though not ordained of God, is yet by Mark, the evangelist, called baptism. I allude to their washing their hands before meals, Mark vii. 3, 4, “For the Pharisees and all the Jews except they wash their hands oft [nipsontai] eat not.” “And when they come from the market, except they wash, or Greek baptize, they eat not. And many other things there be which they have received to hold, as the washings baptismous baptisms of cups, and pots, and brasen vessels, and tables.” Mark here informs us that the universal custom of washing the hands before eating had been derived from the tradition of the elders, it was therefore a religious washing, and is expressed by nipto and baptizo, both of which you must perceive describe one and the same kind of washing.

Again, on one occasion we are told that the Pharisees were astonished because that Jesus Christ had not first washed, in the original baptized, before he sat down to eat. He then reproved them for their own inconsistencies, saying, “You Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and platter,” now as they found fault with Christ for not baptizing before eating, he retorts upon them their baptizing or cleansing katharizo the outside, and not purifying the inside. He here uses baptizo and katharizo as synonymous, and shews that both were performed not by dipping; for had they dipped, the inside as well as the outside would have been cleansed. Here we may also observe that it was usual, in ancient times, to wash or baptize hands by pouring water upon them. Thus Elisha poured water upon the hands of Elijah, I Kings iii. 11. From these premises we may safely infer, that sprinkling or pouring is the scriptural meaning of baptizo.

Mr. CAMPBELL again replied: —

The application of oikia to Stephanas' oikos, it is acknowledged by those critics, Messrs. Macalla, Ralston, and Taylor, lo be a perplexing matter. Mr. Ralston would make it vanish in a moment as respects the point in debate. This indeed he does, by telling us that the oikos meant Stephanas' children, infants I suppose; and that oikia meant his servants! This is cutting the knot that he cannot unloose. But even yet it is not cut; for if the oikia meant the servants of Stephanas, how could they be praised for addicting themselves to the service of the saints at their master's expense! The knot cannot be unloosed, nor can it be cut by such instruments: so the critics may repose in the noose.

But, after all, the last appeal of these critics is to a conjectural case. As Mr. Ralston says; “Let a list of all the families in any given district be taken. Let that list be presented to a person entirely unacquainted with them, and let him select four families promiscuously (how promiscuously!) out of that list, and then let the inquiry be made whether there is, or is not a little child “or infant in these families. I have no hesitation in saying, that out of a hundred selections or trials, there would be found a minor child (under twenty-one, 'tis always best in supposing to take good latitude) or infant, for one selection where no such child would be found.”* So it all comes to the calculation of chances. And thus ends the promised positive proof.

But Mr. Maccalla rests, he says, not wholly upon the import of the word translated house, for the positive evidence, but upon the circumstances of the house mentioned. This is positive evidence founded upon circumstantial evidence: and who would have thought of deducing positive proof from circumstantial evidence!! But yet the circumstances look another way. For of Cornelius' house or family it is said the Holy Spirit fell on them all, and he and his house were saved, for so the angel promised him. Of Lydia's house we have minutely noticed the circumstances. Of the jailer's house, we learn that the word of the Lord was preached to them all, and that they all rejoiced believing in God; and of Stephanas' house, they were the first fruits of Achaia, and had addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints. Strange, indeed, that any person would presume to insinuate the probability that an infant was baptized in any of these families. And to infer that because we have not the names, age, and history of every member of these houses, infants must have been in them, is a worse inference than to infer, that Crispus and his household were not baptized

* I suppose he means he would find a hundred for one. As he has expressed it, it means he would find one in a hundred that had an infant, for one that had not. Although we should not fear such an experiment, for in taking my own immediate vicinity as a district for experiment, I find about half the families destitute of infants, yet this would be a very unfair case; for in all the labours, in all the cities, provinces, and districts in the apostles' labours on record, but four families are found on the historic page—one at Caesarea, two at Philippi, and one at Corinth. But Mr. Ralston would only allow us but one district for four families. Generous man! We give him the history of 60 years, and Europe, Asia, and Africa, and he cannot find one infant baptized. —A. C, because we are only told they believed. We have no account that any other families were baptized by the apostles than those mentioned; for Paul's words, that he did not know whether he had baptized any other at Corinth, means individuals; as the Greek, Latin, and English New Testaments declare. If the baptism of households upon the faith of parents had been practised by the apostles as a general practice, or rather as an universal practice, then, indeed, instead of three thousand who gladly received the word on the day of Pentecost having been baptized, six thousand sit least would been baptized: for allowing that only one third of the number were heads of families, and that the families only averaged three children, the number would have been doubled, and so in every other case when multitudes are said to have believed. But there is not the least probable “round to suppose that it was an universal practice to baptize the families of believers.

Thus we have seen an end to infant baptism. My opponent has tried circumcision and the Jaw, the Abrahamic covenants; he has tried commands and precedents of the Old and New Testament; he has tried”proselyte baptism,” and “household baptism.”
He has traveled from Genesis to Revelation: he has gone from Jerusalem to the uttermost parts of the earth: he has examined the annals of the world for fifteen hundred years, and has not found a syllable about infant baptism. Ill fated cause. It deserves to be abandoned for ever I Amen.'

The modus operandi he has at length introduced. Mode of baptism, curious phrase! Mode of immersion is immersion itself, and mode of sprinkling is sprinkling itself. Two modes of immersion, and one of them sprinkling, is somewhat dissonant.
Sprinkling a mode of immersion, or immersion a mode of sprinkling, is a new mode in logic !! But we must bow with deference to established modes, and it is vulgar to call action, its proper name.

Mr. Maccalla commences his mode of baptism ingeniously, instead of referring to any clear and definite medium of proof, instead of so much as adverting to my disquisition on the import of the term baptisma, and baptize; instead of referring to any authority or translation as a standard of appeal; instead of recurring to any plain case in the New Testament, he lays his foundation in one of the most vague applications of the term in the whole volumes of inspiration. This is wisely done for one who wishes to speak vaguely, and to involve a plain subject in obscurity. As the one baptism is a very plain subject, and does not afford much room for sophistry or ingenuity, it was good policy to go to the doctrine of “diverse baptisms,” mentioned by Paul in his epistle to the Hebrews. In the diaphoros baptismoi of the Jews, we may find something to quarrel about; and Mr. Maccalla has laid the foundation for it. Of this it is presumed you are not so good judges, and therefore we have the more licence. But, my friends, we would take any translation of the Scriptures, the worst that was ever made, and confine ourselves to it alone, in the proof of this point, I will take, before an English congregation, either the present translation, Campbell’s, MacKnight’s, Doddridge’s, Thompson’s, Father Simon’s, or the modern Roman Catholic version, and from any one, without foreign assistance, I will pledge myself to prove that immersion is the only baptism. Now, recollect, my friends, those translations were all made by Pedobaptists. Were I a German I would take Luther’s Bible; or were my hearers Frenchmen or Romans, I would take the popular French or the Vulgate version, and confine myself to any one of these alone; or I would take the Greek before a proper tribunal, and from it prove that immersion is the only baptism. Will my opponent then select any one and confine himself to it alone?

But the whole marrow and pith of Mr. Maccalla’s argument is this, that among the Jews, sundry sprinklings were practised, and that the apostle Paul called those sprinklings baptisms, therefore sprinkling is baptism, and a legitimate meaning of the term. We shall meet it in all its imaginary strength. In the first grasp this argument loses half its strength, for it is undeniably plain that various immersions were practised by the Jews, and the apostle Paul may have referred to these. And Pedobaptists, the most learned, amongst whom are Grotius, Whitby, and MacKnight, interpret this verse as exclusively referring to immersion. In fact they translate it thus: “and diverse immersions and ordinances concerning the flesh, imposed until the time of reformation.” Observe there are here three distinct classes of injunctions: The Jews were to worship God by meats and drinks. In the second place, by different immersions. In the third place, by ordinances concerning the flesh, imposed until the Christian age. Now the “diverse immersions” are stated in the law of Moses, see Levit. xi. 32, “And upon whatsoever” a dead weasel, mouse, tortoise, ferret, lizard, chameleon, snail, or mole “doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed” by immersion. Here are diverse immersions, and frequent occasion for them!! The general rule for immersions in the law of Moses is found. Num. xxxi. 23. “Every thing that may abide the fire ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean; yet it must be purified by the water of separation; and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make go through the water.” See also on the subject of diverse immersions, Lev. xiv. 6—8, Num. xix. 7—19. and xxxi. 21—23. Thus we see, that admitting the references of Mr. Maccalla to the law to be correct, in the instances he has specified, which are very questionable, we have still abundant evidence, that independent of these, there were diverse immersions commanded. So that his main argument has lost half its force in the first attack. The Pedobaptist translators have destroyed the half of what remains, by decidedly translating it diverse immersions; and it all passes into thin air, when it is first noticed that the apostle in the same chapter contradistinguishes the diverse baptisms from the diverse sprinklings—for he drops the word baptisma when he goes to speak of sprinkling, which he does three times in the same chapter, v. 13, rantizousa sprinkling; v. 11, errantise, he sprinkled; v. 21, errantise, he sprinkled. Now if baptisma meant sprinklings in the 10th verse, why should he drop it in the three instances where he speaks in the same chapter of sprinkling!! But the fact is, in the same verse 10th, he contradistinguishes the diverse immersions from the diverse sprinklings, by calling the latter carnal commandments, or according to MacKnight, “ordinances concerning [purifying] the flesh.” Where now is the strength of Mr. Maccalla’s argument? The ambiguity in the use of the word baptismas, for which he pleads from this passage, is now shewn to be entirely a conceit, and it is proved that the word here, as elsewhere, signifies immersion*

* The above investigation applies equally to Pond, John P. Campbell, Mr. Ralston, and other Pedobaptists who have sought for refuge
Mr. MACCALLA again spoke:

Mr. Campbell has told you that the carnal ordinances meant sprinklings: this comes with a good grace from one who says so much about the plainness of scripture. This you will evidently see is a mere retreat from the force of my remarks on the different baptisms. He cannot, I fearlessly affirm, produce one instance where sprinkling is called a carnal commandment or ordinance; and if he cannot, how much is his assertion worth! Until this is done we shall consider the diverse baptisms inclusive of sprinklings, and that baptismos denotes sprinkling as well as dipping.

But we do not found our argument for sprinkling on this passage alone; we are able to prove that submersion is not essential to baptism, from various applications of the word baptizo: and recollect, if we can only produce one instance of the application of this word where it necessarily signifies any thing else than to dip or immerse, the point for which we contend is gained.

That bapto, the word from which baptizo is derived, and consequently of stronger import than its derivative, signifies to wet, either by affusion or sprinkling, appears from the application of it to the case of Nebuchadnezzar being wet with dew. Thus the seventy use the word twice, Dan. iv. 33, “His body was wet [ebaphe] with the dew of heaven.” The dews in eastern regions were very profuse, yet they fell gently to the ground and wet the earth, and the things upon it, by a very gradual affusion, not by dipping; thus the monarch’s body was baptized.

That the word baptizo must sometimes signify aspersions, is proved from 1 Cor. x. 2. “Our fathers,” says Paul, “were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.” There was no immersion in the case, if we except the

in the diverse baptisms or immersions. Dr. Ralston, indeed, defeats himself, for he says, p. 94, that “the baptisms prescribed by the Levitical ritual are referred to,” and “that although tome of these washings required the immersion of the whole body, yet others of them prescribed only the sprinkling of water on the persons to be washed, whether priests or people.” It is conceded that some of them required immersion of the whole body; now this, from a jealous advocate of infant sprinkling, shows that the evidence is very strong for immersion in those Jewish baptisms, and we have proved that in none of them called baptisms was sprinkling used. The sprinklings and baptisms of the Jews are contradistinguished by the apostle.
Egyptians who were overwhelmed in the depths of the sea; for the Israelites walked in the sea as on dry land; and could only be sprinkled with the spray, that might, in the moving of the waters, be dashed upon them. They are however said to have been baptized on the occasion, and we are sure it was not by immersion, but by either affusion or sprinkling. *

It is altogether absurd to argue that because the primary

* As we have added some notes at the bottom of the page to enforce our remarks, we shall add a few to aid Mr. Maccalla, from his friend J. P. Campbell, of whose performance he boasted as unanswerable, p. 65.” In Rev. xix. 13, the Messiah is represented, after treading the symbolical vintage, and being wet with the slaughter of his enemies, as clothed in a vesture dipped in blood.” Isaiah sublimely describes the same event. “I have trodden the wine press alone, and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.” Compare these prophecies, and you will see that St. John has copied Isaiah, and that both predictions relate to the same event in prophetic history, the immense carnage of the anti-Christian armies in the plain of Megiddo. The circumstances thrown into the description make it manifest that the passage in St. John, Bebammenon en haimate, should have been rendered sprinkled or stained with blood; since it is a palpable violation of every thing like truth or fact to suppose that the treader of the wine press should have dipped himself or his garment in the blood of the vintage.”

* Hear the same critic oil Revelations again, p. 61, “the sealing, therefore, of the servants of God in their forehead at this juncture, can imply no less than that many converts should be baptized.” The same thing is implied in another prophecy of St. John. “And I beheld, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him one hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads, “—Rev. xiv. 1. Hero the allusion holds not only with respect to the seal or mark of God in the forehead, but to the very formula of Christian baptism, which is performed in the name of God. What was the mark of the beast on the foreheads of his votaries, but the sign of the cross and a corrupt baptism? And this being set in contrast with God's seal and written name in the foreheads of his true worshippers, nothing else can he intended by the latter, but the true unadulterated baptism of Christ. Thus definitely we see is the seal of baptism fixed by inspiration, and even the mode itself intimated, because plunging persons in water cannot he so properly called the sealing of God in the forehead.”— Ser. on baptism, published 1811, at Lexington, Kentucky. Dr. Ralston, p. 100,” Because the primary meaning of the word is washing by immersion in some Greek writings, they have thence drawn the conclusion that it should be so understood when denoting the initiating ordinance into the church, without reflecting that it is not used, in a, literal but figurative sense.”—A. C.
signification of any word may be so and so, that it never signifies anything else. To see the weakness and fallacy of any such attempt to decide the question before us, you have only to remark its operation in a case precisely similar. The words phago and esthio, pino and pio, are used by the New Testament writers to express the acts of eating and drinking in the sacrament of the supper, and beside this, supper amongst the ancients was the principal meal. Now a stickler for the primitive meaning of the words and the duty, as he apprehends, indicated by it, might say—“the original and native signification of these words is to eat and to drink as much as would be proper at a common temperate meal, and they are so used in many passages of the New Testament, as in Matt. vi. 31; xi. 19. “Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat, or, What shall we drink.” “The Soul of man came eating and drinking.” Now as the sacred writers employ these words to describe my acts at the table of the Lord, I contend that I should eat as much bread and drink as much wine in the holy supper, as I should do in taking a common temperate meal. And I take the liberty to say, that those persons who take a small bit of bread and sip a little wine have not supped at all in remembrance of Christ, and are guilty of insulting mockery in the celebration of that holy ordinance.” You would reject such an argument as a pitiful conceit; yet who will affirm that it is not just as good as that of the Baptists in support of immersion, with this difference, however, in its favour, that the person contending for the more bread and the more wine can produce many clear examples from the New Testament to establish the primitive signification of the words expressive of such eating and drinking in the supper; which is what the Baptists cannot do with respect to the primitive meaning of baptizo.

“There is yet another method of determining the question, as to the mode of baptism, greatly superior to that of rummaging lexicographers and grammarians; and that is by attending to the manner in which the sacred writers use the word baptizo, when they describe the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost, which are as much facts as the baptism of water.

John had foretold that Christ should “baptize with the Holy Ghost and with fire;” and on the day of Pentecost the prediction was gloriously fulfilled, Acts ii. The conceit of Mr. Booth that the words, “it filled all the house,” necessarily imply that the disciples were immersed, is worthy of himself; and might for me take an endless repose in the vaunting pages of that knight-errant of anabaptism, did I not see it revived by others in our day. You say “they were immersed, “—I ask, immersed in what? Every one must answer, “a sound from heaven.” Be it so; the disciples were immersed in sound, and so was the house and every thing in it; as well as they. But this was not the baptism predicted by John or narrated by Luke. The appearance of lambent flame, the visible form assumed by the Holy Ghost, which “sat upon each disciple, was the baptism of fire; the invisible influence of the Spirit which was “shed forth” upon, and filled them all, was the baptism of the Holy Ghost: but neither the one nor the other was the circumambient sound that filled the house; which was a mere circumstance, not essential either to the prediction or the fact.

Luminous forms like fire “appeared and sat upon each of them.” This was a literal baptism, and baptism by affusion. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost. This baptism, though invisible, was real, and though as to the mode of its application, perfectly inconceivable to us mortals, yet the terms in which it is spoken of, are descriptive of affusion, not dipping. It is expressed here and elsewhere by the phrases pouring out, shedding forth, falling upon, and coming upon; Acts x. 44, 45; xix. 6. It is therefore undeniable that all these different expressions, pouring upon, falling upon, and the like, are in the style of scripture, a true and proper baptism in the mode of affusion."

[We have given Mr. Maccalla's argument here in the words of his friend J. P. Campbell, from whom he seemed to have taken it; at any rate it precisely expresses his sentiments as noted down. ]

From the application of the word baptizo and baptismos in the scriptures, you see, my friends, that it is not used to signify submersion, but washing, in whatever manner performed. Even a partial washing is sometimes spoken of, as all that is necessary to a complete washing, “Thou shall never wash my feet,” said Peter to the Lord. “If I wash thee not,” said the Lord to Peter, “thou hast no part with me.” Peter exclaims, “Lord! not my feet only, but my hands and my head.” Peter desired a complete washing, not a partial washing. He supposed that in order to a complete washing he should be all washed. His Master corrected this error by assuring him that a partial washing was all that was necessary, “he that is washed, needeth not, save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit.” Hence we learn, that to wash a small part of the person, as the face or feet, is, in a religious sense, to wash the whole man. And this proves the error of those grammarians who affirm that louso always signifies to wash the whole body. It is applied once to the stripes inflicted on the apostles, Acts xvi. 33, and once to the eyes, Song v. 12. So that it does not necessarily signify the washing of the whole person.

Mr. Campbell rejoined: —

You remember, my friends, that I proposed to my opponent that I would agree to take up any translation of the scriptures ever made, to which we could have access, and that from it, without any foreign assistance, I would engage to prove that immersion is the only baptism. But to this he cannot agree. You will also remember that he has not so much as yet adverted to my disquisition on the words in controversy. He continues to introduce such passages as from their figurative character will afford him some scope for his talent of rendering plain things obscure. Like Dr. Ralston, he argues that the word baptizo and baptismos “are not used in a literal but figurative sense” in relation to baptism. So say the Socinians with respect to the title of Messiah. It is the refuge of all errorists to hide themselves in mystery, in allegory, in figurative representations. In this way nothing is certain. Or. Doddridge says, “I am more and more convinced that the vulgar [common] sense of the New Testament, that is, the sense in which an honest man of plain sense would take it, on his first reading the original, or any good translation, is almost every where the true and the general sense of the passage. I choose to follow the plainest, and the most obvious and common interpretation, which, indeed, I generally think the best.”—Notes on Matt. xviii. 17, and 2 Cor. viii. 1.

That every word of any note has both a figurative and a literal meaning, I presume all grammarians, lexicographers, and critics will confess. There are but two questions necessary on this topic of debate; the one is, whether the word baptismos is to be taken literally or figuratively; the other is, if literally, what is its literal import. Messrs. Ralston, J. Campbell, and my opponent, and many modern writers on baptism, say it should be taken figuratively; and therefore at once recur to Nebuchadnezzar's baptism with dew, the baptism of the Holy Spirit, Israel's baptism unto Moses at the Red Sea, &c. We argue that it is to be taken in its most common or literal import, and in this we agree with the concurrent declarations of all critics of eminence, who say with Blackstone, “that the words of a law are generally to be understood in their usual or most known signification, not so much regarding the propriety of grammar, as their general and popular use.”—Com. Vol. I. sect. 2. In this we also agree with the dictates of common sense. For who that was not under the tyranny of a blinded zeal, would ever think that the word, the emphatic word, of a plain and obligatory precept or institution, was not to be understood literally, but figuratively! It is, however, on this absurd principle that Pedobaptists defend their practice.

I come now to refute those false glosses which you have heard in the last speech. But first of the carnal ordinances, or carnal commandments. I have been told that it is impossible to show that this is to be understood of sprinkling. Let us try. Heb. vii. 16. The Jewish priests were made after, or according to the law of a carnal commandment, our High Priest was not made after such a law. The consecrating of a priest required, according to the law, sprinkling, shaving, washing the clothes, and cleansing the flesh; consequently, the “ordinances concerning the flesh” included the sprinkling, and then its being distinguished from the diverse baptisms confirms the matter still more. But on this we lay but little stress, as it is plainly shown in chap. ix., that the diverse baptisms and the diverse sprinklings are diverse things.

As for the Israelites being baptized unto Moses, although it was a figure only, we see the allusion so plain in the cloud and in the sea that we cannot mistake. They walked on the bottom of the Red Sea, the water stood like a wall on both sides, and the cloud covered their heads. Recollect, my friends, they were not baptized only in the sea, but in the cloud and sea taken together. The two, the cloud above, and the water on each side, completely overwhelmed them. Mr. Maccalla will have them sprinkled here with the spray.
He supposes there was a wind blowing at the time, and the spray dashing upon them, so that they came out of the sea dripping wet, completely rantized. This is all guessing to suit the case. I do not think that a drop of the water fell on them; no; they traveled as on dry land, and the mere circumstance of their being surrounded with water and covered with a cloud is called their baptism.

As to Nebuchadnezzar's being baptized in the dew, it is evident to all; that the word is here used figuratively. Even the Pedobaptists must admit it on their own principle; for they do not suppose that they should administer baptism in the manner in which this impious monarch was baptized. The effect of the dew is here spoken of, the extent of his wetting is compared to the effect of baptism. This is a very ordinary figure of speech. He slept upon the dewy grass, and was so completely moistened, as though immersed in water. He was in the dew, overwhelmed with it as a person in a river.

The same may be said of the baptism in the Holy Spirit of which the Jews on the day of Pentecost, and the Gentiles in the house of Cornelius, were subjects. The word is used figuratively. This also the Pedobaptists must admit, for they will not say that the subjects of this baptism were sprinkled, or poured, or immersed into the Holy Spirit. You have, however, heard that "this was a literal baptism, and baptism by affusion," and that it was "invisible;" and as to the mode of its application perfectly "inconceivable to us mortals." I ask then, in the name of common sense why bring it forward as an evidence of the mode, if "the mode of its application is perfectly inconceivable!" But the imposing mistake in this reference is the alleging that the pouring out, the coming upon, the shedding forth, and the falling upon, is called the baptism. This is a petitio principii, a begging of the question. Let this first be proved. But it cannot. It is remarkable, in this instance, as in many others, how easily we impose upon ourselves from our fondness to maintain certain tenets. The descending, nor the pouring out, nor the coming upon, is, what is, on any occasion, called baptism, or the baptism of the Holy Spirit. But their being put under its influence, and not its coming upon them, is called baptism. Hence their being put under the external emblems, the fiery tongues, and their being filled with its internal influence, is called their baptism in fire and in the Holy Spirit. Their bodies were under the “lambent flame,” and their souls under the influence of the Holy Spirit; thus they were figuratively baptized in the fire, and in the Holy Spirit.

Whatever is dyed is figuratively baptized, because dying is an effect of immersion in certain cases. But how absurd would it be to say that the fuller's process of dying is necessary to baptism, and that no person is properly, baptized who has not been treated as the fuller's cloth; yet this is the very sophism which the Pedobaptists impose upon themselves, and those who hearken to them, when explaining their mode of baptism.

You have heard it represented as though the quantity of water was the bone of contention, as though there was a peculiar efficacy in the “more water” that is not in the “less water.” And to expose “the fallacy and weakness” of the Baptist's views on this principle, or rather the views which Mr. Maccalla imputes to them, you are told of the import of the words eating and drinking in common use, and the difference of their import in the holy supper. This is all an imposition on your understandings. For who does not know that the action of eating and drinking is the same, whatever be the quantity eaten or drank. And again, the controversy is not a question about quantities, but about a certain action; for, as Tertullian says, “It is all one whether we are washed in the sea, or in a pond; in a fountain, or in a river; in a standing or in a running water; nor is there any difference between those that John immersed in the Jordan, and those that Peter immersed in the Tiber.” And it is not a fact that the argument for eating more is the same, or as good, as that of the Baptists for immersion. They are essentially different; for immersion is one action, and sprinkling is another; but the act of eating is the same, whether the quantity eaten be much or little.

As to the remarks offered upon “he that is washed needeth not, save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit,” they are of a piece with the preceding. They are an imposition on credulity itself.* We have nothing to do at present with

* Thompson translates the verse thus: “He who hath bathed, needeth only to wash the feet, the rest of the body being clean.” This does not favour the idea that the washing of the feet cleanses the the doctrinal import, but only with the literal import of this passage; and this, so far from countenancing the idea that the washing of the feet cleanses the whole body, is predicated upon the body having been washed. For when the whole body has been bathed, the washing of the feet renders the person entirely clean.

As to the verb louo being used to signify a partial washing, no instance can be given in the sacred dialect. John P. Campbell said he had found one, in Song v. 12. but he was too sanguine here. He writes it thus, p. 63. “his eyes washed (leloumenoi) with milk and fitly set.” Now judge of my surprise, when turning over to the Septuagint I find no such thing. He makes leloumenoi to agree with ophthalmoi, but it is not in the verse.*

whole body. Father Simon, the French translator, of the vulgate, and Webster's translation of Simon give it thus: “He who hath been washed, hath no need but to wash his feet, being entirely clean.” Dr. Campbell translates it thus: “He who hath been bathed needeth only to wash his feet, the rest of his body being clean.” Hammond and Scott agree with the above, and so explain the passage. Dr. Campbell supports his translation by unanswerable criticism. See his Notes on John ix. 7; xiii. 10. So translate the honest Pedobaptists.

* I shall write the whole verse as it stands in the Septuagint,— “Ophthalmoi autou hos peristerai epi pleromata hadaton, lelousmenai en galakti kathemenai epi pleromata.” Thompson translates it thus, and we know his translation will not be caviled at, as mine would be: “His eyes are like doves by streams of water—milk-white doves sitting by streams.” So that in fact lelousmenai does not apply to eyes at all,—it does not agree with it in gender. He might as well have applied kathemenai to eyes, and represented the eyes as sitting by the streams of water!! Such monstrous errors and misrepresentations of the Pedobaptist writers contributed much to making me a Baptist. I have frequently complimented the talents of the late Mr. Campbell of Kentucky, but as I esteem the truth more than any man, I must say either his erudition or his candour failed him often when writing on infant baptism.

I shall put two Pedobaptists against each other, of the same name and kirk. Dr. George of Scotland, and J. P. of Kentucky. Mr. J. P. p. 63, “But it is enough to say, that the comment rests” on a false opinion of grammarians, which is, that the Greek word louo always and necessarily signifies washing the whole body. The word is used, Acts xvi. 33: “He took them the same hour of the night and washed their stripes.” Here the washing is confined to the part of the body which had been wounded by scourging; for no person can believe that the whole frame had been lacerated with whips.” His Presbyterian brother, Dr. George, upon the same passage, saith, Vol. iv. p. 450,
We shall conclude our speech at this time, by stating our third argument in proof that immersion is the only baptism. This is drawn from the places where baptism was usually administered, which were places of much water, rivers, and baths. Now if sprinkling had been the primitive practice

“That the verb louein is commonly used in the manner mentioned, see Acts ix. 37; Heb. x. 23; 2 Pet. ii. 22; Rev. i. 5. In all which, whether the words be used literally or metaphorically, the complete closing of the body or person is meant. There is only one passage about which there can be any doubt. It is in Acts xvi. 33, where the jailer, upon his conversion by Paul and Silas, prisoners committed to his custody, is said in the English translation to have washed their stripes. The verb is elousen. But let it be observed, that this is not an accurate version of the Greek phrase elousen apo ton plegou, which, in my opinion, implies bathing the whole body, for the sake both of washing their wounds, and administering some relief to their persons. The accusative to the active verb elousen is evidently ta somata understood. The full expression is elouen ta somata auton apo ton plegou. The same distinction between the words is well observed in the Septuagint. The word wash in English, when used as a neuter verb, without a regimen, is commonly, if not always, understood to relate to the whole body. The word nipsai shows, on the contrary, that the sacred author meant only a part.”

J. P. Campbell’s assertion that “bebammenon en haimati” should be translated sprinkled in blood, merits no reply. It is a mere assertion contrary to all evidence, and to all critics worthy the name. Thompson translates it, Rev. xix. 13, “He was clothed with a mantle dipped in blood.” The common translation is the same in substance. Father Simon’s “He was clothed in a robe dipped in blood,” and so all translators but Mr. J. P. Campbell who wished to make it so. I shall quote by an extract from Dr. G. Campbell, on the washing of the stripes as a refutation of Mr. J. P. Campbell and the (unable to read text of phrase) Gos. sect. iv. p. p. 71, “For illustrating this passage, let it be observed, 1st, That the two verbs two verbs rendered wash in the common Testament are different in the original. The first is arpsoutai, properly translated wash; the second is, “baptisontai” which limits us to a particular mode of washing, for baptizo denotes to plunge, to dip.” “Baptisthai,” says the excellent critic Wetstein, with whom I concur with bishop Pearce, ’est ’est manus aquae im-(unable to read remainder of page)
(a few quarts being sufficient for great numbers,) why speak of Jordan, and of places of much water? why speak of going down into, and coming up from rivers and streams? Why were baths built and supplied with water in the ancient edifices where congregations met? Why should the baptized have been described as buried in the water of baptism, and as having arisen out of it, as out of the grave? &c. I say that these facts demonstrate the ancient practice as having been immersion, and not sprinkling.

Mr. MACCALLA arose:

It is estimated that the population of Judea at the time of John's baptizing, amounted to about 3,000,000. Of these great numbers were baptized, and according to some Baptist writers almost all Judea were baptized by John. Now had John immersed all these multitudes, it would have required him to have spent eight hours every day in the water for the space of three years. But we are told that he baptized in Jordan, and that is thought by some to be positive proof of immersion. Here it is evident that the whole matter rests upon the word in, for if we should translate it at instead of in, the positive proof vanishes. In the New Testament alone the preposition en has no less than sixteen, meanings, This you will see by looking into Parkhurst's Lexicon. He defines it as follow: I. Governing a dative, it signifies, 1. in, of place; 2. among; 3. with, together with; 4. with, by; 5. by, denoting the agent; 6. by, through; 7. for, an account of; 8. of, concerning; 9. to, unto; 10. towards; 11. nigh to; 12. into; 13. consisting of; 14. according to. II. With an infinitive preceded by the neuter article to, it retains its primary signification of in, but may be rendered whereas; 2. that, because. These meanings Parkhurst well supports by quotations and references to numerous portions of the New Testament. Now in many places we have en translated in, where it ought to have been translated either at or nigh to. Take a few specimens from my friend J. P. Campbell's Remarks, or the great David Jones' performance, p. 49. John xix. 41, “Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden.” In this text the common translation of the words (en to topo) does not express the fact, which was that the garden was near to the place of crucifixion; it should have been, “Now nigh to the place,” &c.

Schleusner, a man no less famous for the herculean force of his genius than for the extent of his erudition, expounds the word as we do, thus, “7. nigh to, at, near,” and refers to the following very appropriate examples of the propriety of such rendering. Matt. xxiv. 15. “When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation—stand (en topo agio) in the holy place; then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains.” This warning was given to instruct the Christians to flee as soon as the first evident indications of danger should occur in Jerusalem; of which one should be “the abomination of desolation standing near the holy place;” for fact demonstrates that the abomination of desolation, namely, the Roman army (Comp. Luke xxi. 20, 21.) did not stand in the holy place, but on the outside of the city, when the Christians were directed to make their escape. Luke xiii. 4. The tower (en to Siloam) in Siloam fell;” the translation should have been the tower at Siloam, for none will pretend that the tower stood in the pool of Siloam. John x. 23. “Jesus walked (en to Hiero) in the temple, in Solomon's porch; “—the rendering should have been near the temple, because every one knows Solomon's porch was not in the temple but near to it. These were Schleusner's examples. I will add a few others. John i. 28. “These things were done (en) in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.” Mr. Jones will not believe, I presume, that John baptized in the house or village called Bethabara when Jordan was near it; all parties, therefore, must conspire to translate it, “These things were done at or nigh to Bethabara,” &c. John x. 20. “Who leaned on Jesus’ bosom (en to deipno) at supper.” Heb. ix. 4. “The ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, (en fie) wherein (it should be nigh to which) was the golden pot.” 1 These. ii. 19. “Our Lord Jesus Christ [en] at his coming.” Heb. xii. 2. [era] “At the right hand of the throne of God.”

Judges xviii. 12. “And they went up and pitched [LXX. en kariathiarim] in Kirjath-jearim in Judah; wherefore they called the name of the place Mahannehdan unto this day: behold it is behind Kirjath-jearim.” Here the cite of the encampment, which was behind Kirjath-jearim, was nigh to, not in it. 1 Kings, ii. 34, “He was buried [LXX. en to oiko autou] in his own house in the wilderness.” The grave was near to, or at, not in the house. Josh. x. 10, “And slew him with great slaughter [LXX. en Gabaon] at Gibeon.” Josh. iii. 8, (Comp. v. 13—15.) “When ye are come to the brink of the water ye shall stand still [LXX. en to Jordane] in Jordan,” Here coming to the brink of the water is called standing en to Jordane (the very words used in Matthew and Mark), and cannot mean any thing else than at Jordan, or by the edge of its waters. This example is decisive, and in conjunction with preceding ones, settles the question as to the proper rendering of the passages in dispute.

You now see, my friends, how little ground there is for that vaunting confidence of the Baptists in the plainness and certainty of immersion. I think you will agree with me that it is by no means certain that John the Baptist or any of the apostles ever immersed any person. As the whole matter depends upon the import of the word baptizo and baptisma, and the prepositions en, eis, ek, and apo, you will no doubt, although this part of the subject is dry, and must necessarily be so, patiently hear a few remarks on the preposition eis. For you must know that eis is a word of great importance in this controversy, as the Baptists say, it is the word that takes them into the water. Parkhurst gives no less than eighteen different meanings for this preposition: “1st. In governing an accusative, 1; into, 2; to, into, 3; among, 4; on, upon, 5; at, on, 6; towards, with, respect to, 7; before, in the presence of, 8; for, on account of, 9; of concerning, 10; against, 11; through or by, 12; in order to, 13; of time, for, 14; it is used for en, in, at, 15; for, as. 2nd. With an infinitive verb and the neuter article to, it may be rendered 1, for, for to; 2, that, to the end that; 3, so that.” That eis very often signifies at, near to, towards, will appear from the following references, Campbell's remarks, p. 51: Matt. ii. 21. “And went [eis] towards the land of Israel.” viii. 18. “Gave commandment to depart [eis] to the other side. xiv. 22. “Go before him [eis] unto the other shore.” xxviii. 1. “As it began to dawn [eis] towards the first day of the week.” See Matt. xv.; 24. xxii, 4.; xxiv. 14.
Other sacred writers use it in the same manner. Mark v. 1, “Came over [m] unto the other side.” Luke viii. 26, “Arrived [eis] at the country of the Gadarenes.” xxiv. 50, “He led them out as far as [eis] to Bethany.” John iv. 5, “Then cometh he [eis] to a city.” Christ had not yet entered the city. v. 6—8. xi. 31, 32, 38, “She fell down [eis] at his feet. She goeth [eis] unto the grave. Jesus cometh [eis] to the grave.” xxiv. 4—9. “Jesus stood [eis] on (i.e. nigh to), the shore. As soon as they were come [m] to land.” Acts xxvii. 14. “And so we went [eis] toward Rome.” John xviii. 28, “Then led they Jesus [eis] unto the hall of judgment. They themselves went not into the judgment hull.”

See also John xiii. 1.; Phil. iii. 11.; Eph. iv. 13.; 1 Pet. iv. 9.

The Septuagint also furnishes a great variety of such examples. Jud. iv. 13, “From Harosheth of the Gentiles [eis] to the river Kishon.” 2 Sam, v. 6, “And the king and his men went [eis] to Jerusalem,” that is in order to attack and take it before they could enter into it. xii. 29, “David went [eis] to Rabbah, and fought against it, and took it.” 1 Kings i. 38, “And caused Solomon to ride upon king David's mule and brought him [eis] to Gihon.” No body will be weak enough to think that Solomon on the occasion of his inauguration, and thus mounted, was put into the spring Gihon. Joshua iii. 15, “To the feet, of the priests, [ebaphesan eis meros tou hadatos tou Jordanou] were dipped in the brim of the water.” Here the feet of the priests were dipped into the brim of the water, and as yet appears from verse 13, the soles of their feet only were wet with water. When it is said, therefore, that their feet were dipped into the edge of the water, it is plain we are to understand from 'he connexion, the priests came so close to the water as that the soles alone were wet by the water oozing under them.”

Mr. CAMPBELL replied:

You must observe, my friends, the essential difference betwixt the coarse pursued by me and that that pursued by my opponent; not only in reference to one part, but in reference to the whole of this controversy. This difference is, however, no where more conspicuous than in the present instance. I have proposed to be guided in ascertaining the import of the original words by the verdict of the translators of the common version, trammelled as they were by king James' authority. For although they were prohibited by the king from translating bapto and baptizo into English, when they had reference to this ordinance; yet in no cue instance did they translate these words by to pour, to pour nut, or to sprinkle; nor ever did they in one instance, translate raino, or rantizo by to dip, immerse, or plunge. Has Mr. Macalla controverted these facts? No. I also proposed to take any modern translation whatever, and from it alone prove that immersion, is the only baptism. Has Mr. Macalla acceded to this overture? No. I have also proposed to take the common or literal meaning of the terms in dispute as given by Greek lexicographers, and as used by Greek writers, sacred and classical, and to abide by their decision. Has Mr. Macalla acceded to this proposal? No. Now what is his course? It is simply this: First to adopt no standard of appeal, to fix upon no definite terms. But it is, secondly, to throw every thing into uncertainty, by representing these terms as ambiguous, by vague allusions to their figurative use, and by one of the grossest sophisms, fallacia accidentis; as when we say a thing must he so, because it may accidentally be so; I say this is his course of darkening, confounding, and perplexing the subject, and at the same time the minds of the auditors. We have again and again shewn, that in all institutes and ordinances, civil or religious, the words are to be taken literally, or in their commonly received sense; and more especially in positive appointments.

Mr. Macalla's method of ascertaining the true meaning of the terms in dispute, may be illustrated very clearly by a very slight reference to the most common occurrences in a figurative style. Cataline was called the head of the faction; Emmet the key-stone of the conspiracy; Talleyrand the eye of France. Here the words head, key-stone, and eye are used figuratively. Suppose a thousand years hence a controversy should arise about the meaning of these terms. A scholar would say that head literally denoted the most important member of an animal; but a sophist would, on my opponent's principle, say, by no means, for instances can be produced, of great antiquity and respectability, which shew that it signified a whole man; and then comes the argument, the sophistical argument, Cataline was culled a head, but Cataline was a man; therefore, the term head denoted a man. Just so, of the terms eye and key-stone, &c. A scholar affirms that the term melt signifies to liquify, to dissolve, commonly by means of heat. No, says a sophist, for I once read of a whole congregation melting into tears, but they did not become liquid. Therefore the term to melt cannot signify to convert into a liquid state, by means of heat! A thousand instances might be adduced to expose the sophistry of Mr. Macalla's criticisms. These suffice to show how easily the sophistry may be detected.

His, and J. P. Campbell's disquisitions upon the prepositions en, eis, ek, and apo, remind one of the Diversions of Purley, by John Horne Tooke. En, says Mr. Parkhurst, has sixteen different meanings; yet he never gave at as one, as these gentlemen would have it translated. Eis, says Mr. Parkhurst, has eighteen different meanings. Now, says Mr. Macalla, it is in vain to determine, or to attempt to determine, what en or what eis signifies in reference to baptism. Mr. Macalla does not, however, say, that nothing can be determined, although he would at one time so represent it; for he has selected nigh to, near at, for a suitable meaning for en; and at, near to, towards, to, for eis. In fact, they make them both signify the same thing. They select the 9th, 10th, and 11th uses of en, and the 2nd, 5th, and 6th meanings of eis, as suitable to their purpose; and thus represent en and eis as both signifying nigh to, near, at, to; but the most common, which is the first meaning, given by lexicographers, none of these Pedobaptist critics will admit as correct in relation to baptism. Now the difference between them and us here is just this: we take the first meaning, that is the most common meaning in all cases as respects this ordinance; we take the first meaning of baptizo, baptismos, eis, en, ek, apo. We uniformly take the first or primary, which is the literal import of the terms in dispute. But my opponents take the 6th meaning of one, and the 11th meaning of another, just as it suits their humour.

But after all this parade of diversity of meaning ascribed to those prepositions; what, if all these meanings were reducible to one? Or what, if it could be proved that the first meaning is the only meaning, in the abstract principles of language, that properly belongs to each of these preposi-lions? Dr. Samuel Johnson gives twenty different meanings for the English preposition from, and twenty-two “other manners” of using it; in all forty-two cases of from. These the learned Dr. supports by more than seventy quotations. Yet the celebrated Home Tooke, Vol. i. p. 282, explodes the metaphysics of the Doctor, and shews that it was all conceit, that from has just one meaning, and that is the meaning which every body usually affixes to it.*

Mr. Maccalla has given us thirteen instances from J. P. Campbell’s Review, where en signifies nigh to, at, or near. In the conclusion of this exhibition of en, he presents, Josh, iii. 8—15, on which he observes, “that coming to the brink of the water is called standing in the Jordan.” Now this is not so expressed either in the Septuagint, the common English, or in any other translation. It is a bold conceit. The Septuagint literally reads, “Soon as you are come to a part of the water of the Jordan, you shall halt in the Jordan.” Here coming to the water, and halting, are two things, not one and the same. Again, the 15th verse illustrates and confirms this, Thompson’s Translation, “And soon as the feet of the priests who were carrying the ark of the covenant of the Lord were dipped into a part of the water of the Jordan,” &c. They halted, and the waters stopped. I would not have noticed this last criticism, only that you heard this example given as a decisive one of the import of the phrase

* A certain Mr. Greenwood gives seventeen meanings to the English preposition for, and Dr. Johnson gives no less than forty-six meanings to it, supported by upwards of two hundred instances of actual usage. But the celebrated Home Tooke demonstrates that it has but one meaning, and that all the pretended meanings of Dr. S. Johnson are resolvable into it. Just so of the sixteen meanings of en, and of the eighteen of eis given by Mr. Parkhurst. Every meaning ascribed to en can be resolved into in, and every one ascribed to eis can be resolved to into. As Home Tooke expresses himself, Vol. i. p. 324, concerning Lord Monboddo and his theory, so would we say of Mr. Maccalla and his theory. His words are,” But his Lordship and his fautors will do well to contend stoutly and obstinately for their doctrine of language, for they are menaced with a greater danger than they will at first apprehend: for if they give up their doctrine of language, they will not be able to make even a battle for their metaphysics: the very term metaphysics being nonsense; and all the systems of it and (unable to read rest of line) [en to Jordane. ] For, in fact, these thirteen examples being of a piece with the last, and standing upon assertion only, prove nothing as respects the true import of the preposition en. Let us suppose, however, that it is proved to signify generally, or literally near, nigh to, close by, and then let us so translate it, and see what kind of theology we shall obtain from scripture. We shall just open the first verse of the Bible, for en was the first word written by Moses, En arche, near, or nigh to the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth. This is doubtless a new discovery. We formerly thought it was in the beginning, but according to these moderns it was some time after the beginning. But let us try another instance or two, John i. 1, “Near the beginning was the Word. This Mr. Maccalla will lead you to Socinianism or Arianism. Rev. xxi. 8. “Murderers, adulterers, fornicators, thieves, liars, infidels, shall have their part near to, or close by, not in, the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone.” What new doctrine is this? Jonah was three days and three nights not in but nigh to the whale's belly. Lazarus was not in the grave, but only nigh to it, when he was brought to life. Paul was not let down the wall in a basket, but only close by it. He was not a day and a night in, but only near to the deep. Noah and his family were not saved in the ark, but only close by, or near to, or at it. The Egyptians were not drowned in the lied Sea, but only close by, at, or near to it. These and ten thousand new discoveries originate from this new translation of en, made for the relief, and by the talents of, infant sprinklers.

Mr. Maccalla gave us a similar specimen, from the same fountain, of eis necessarily signifying towards, to, at, or unto. All interpreters give the primary and literal meaning of eis by into, and it is declared by the most acute and philosophical critics as being always capable of being resolved into this primary meaning. Take a specimen from these examples read by Mr. Maccalla. The first is from Matt. ii. 21, “And went [eis] towards,” Mr. Campbell says the land of Israel; but why not into the land of Israel? His second example is from Matt. viii. 18, “Gave commandment to depart [eis] to,” says Mr. Campbell, but why not into the other side, this is surely the meaning; the uncouthness of the expression is no offence against propriety of meaning. His third example. Matt. xiv. 22, “Go before him [eis] unto,” but why not into the other shore. This is most certainly the sense. And so on, in the other instances he has given. Let us, however, say with Mr. Maccalla and his coadjutors that at, near, towards, or unto ought to be generally adopted (for this is the pith of the argument), and then let us test the correctness of the sense. It will, indeed, introduce some new doctrines. Daniel was cast [m] towards, near to, or unto, but not into the lion's den. The mariners cast Jonah [m] towards, near to, unto, but not into the sea. All the rivers run [eis] towards, near to, unto, but not into, the sea. The herd of swine ran down [eis] towards, near to, unto, or to the sen, and were drowned, but did not run into it. Jesus Christ and his apostles often went towards, near to, or unto, but never once [eis] into Jerusalem. Peter, James, and John, &c. often went towards, near to, unto, but never into a house. Paul went [eis] towards, near to, unto, but never into a ship. Millions have gone [eis] towards, near to, unto, but never into the grave. The wicked shall be cast (eis) towards, near to, unto, but not into hell. The righteous shall go near to, towards, [eis] unto, but not one into heaven. These, and ten thousand new doctrines, opinions, and facts grow out of those Pedobaptist criticisms.

But the fair and impartial way of examining this subject is to take two or three chapters any where in the Greek, Old or New Testament, and read them off, pausing at every occurrence of these prepositions, and inquiring into their necessary meaning. I invite Mr, Maccalla to do this. We have got the original scriptures here, he may choose the chapters, and either he or I will read them.

You need not think it strange, my friends, that there should be so much diversity of opinions now existing about baptism. Amongst the Baptists themselves there have been many differences of opinion upon this subject. Some have affirmed that John's baptism and Christian baptism are one and the same. Others deny it. Some have immersed three times. Others once. Some have plunged the candidate face foremost, and others backwards into the water. Quakers deny water baptism altogether, and contend for the baptism of the Spirit as the only baptism.
Much has been said of the literal and figurative, the primary and secondary meaning of the words by the Baptists in general, and my opponent in particular. This suits very well on some occasions, but on other subjects we find the Baptists will take any meaning, whether literal or figurative, whether primary or secondary, that happens to suit their schemes.

My opponent leaps over those examples I have given of en and eis necessarily signifying not in and into, with the same agility that he leaps over the multitudes that John baptized. It is true he gets over it in one way and Robinson ill another. The one in silence, and the other by denying it.

Robinson deserves some praise for his description of Α῾non, for his candor in one instance, especially where it takes so much from the argument of the Baptists drawn from the places of “much water” where it was administered. His description is in the following words, p. 27: “Salim was at least fifty miles north up the river Jordan from the place where John had began to baptize. Α῾non, near it, was either a natural spring, an artificial reservoir, or a cavernous temple of the sun, prepared by the Canaanites, the ancient idolatrous inhabitants of the land. The eastern versions, that is, the Syriac, Ethiopic, Persic, and Arable of the gospel of John, as well as the Hebrew and Chaldean Ain-yon, or Gnain-yon, suggest these opinions, and it is difficult to say which is the precise meaning of the evangelist's word Α῾non, and it is not certain whether the plain meaning be, John was baptizing at the Dove-spring near Salim, or John was baptizing at the Sun-fountain near Salim.” From this departure from the Baptists, should we not charge him with witchcraft?

But the fact of there being much water at Α῾non is very dubious, to say the least of it, and therefore it is by no means probable that John immersed them in a fountain. Maundrel's description of the country, and his complaint of thirst, and the difficulty of getting a drink in that vicinity, do not much favour the idea of much water being there.

It would seem as if the Baptists laid great stress upon the circumstance of persons being baptized at rivers, or where much water is spoken of, as affording indubitable evidence of immersion. Yet we sometimes baptize at rivers or streams, and do not immerse. An instance of this kind occurred not long since in my own congregation. A disciple, not of the strongest mind, was solicitous to be baptized at the river, because of what he had read of river baptism in the scriptures. I agreed to go with him to the river, and we both went down to the water, and I baptized him, but not by submersion. A Baptist writer and critic hearing of this, might suppose, from reading the narrative were it published, that this was a proof of immersion, and that because we both went down to the water, I doubtless immersed him.

Indeed a person may often go down into a river, and come up from, or out of, a river, and never wet his foot. How often have I and others in traveling gone down into a river, and come up from it, without wetting a toe or a finger. In describing our journeys we do not mention every little circumstance, but in general terms say, we went down into such a place, a creek or a river, and came up from it, not saying whether on foot or on horseback, whether we forded, or were ferried across the stream; whether we were in the water, or only upon, or at it.

But the Baptists lay great stress upon the preposition apo, and ek, as well as upon eis and en. Parkhurst gives fifteen meanings for apo, and seven for ek, Apo signifies 1, from; 2, from out of; 3, from after; 4, from since; 5, from, for, by reason of; 6, from, of; 7, from, by, by means of; 8, of, by; 9, through; 10, at, at the distance of; 11, of time, at, on, at the distance of; 12, of some, of; 13, before, in presence of; 14, of, belonging to; 15, redundant, apo makrothen. Ek signifies 1, motion from a place out of; 2, out of, of, from; 3, from, or by; 4, of time, from ever since; 5, of price, for; 6, of place; 7, in.

In so great a variety of meanings, you see, my friends, we must always select such a one as suits the context, and as my opponent insists so much upon the primary meaning of all words in this controversy, we hope he will take the primary meaning of apo, and always translate it from, and not out of, and then we shall see that it will not be so plain that they came up out of the water, but in most instances it will read, they came up from the water.

Of the import of baptizo, we may say with Mr. Ralston, page 64, “that from the definitions of it given by Parkhurst and Schleusner, confessedly the ablest lexicographers of modern times, it fully appears that although it was used frequently by Greek writers to denote immersion, yet it is never used in this sense in the New Testament; and I boldly affirm, that there is not a good Greek linguist who has read, or who will read, Mr. J. P. Campbell's book, but will be fully convinced that this is the case. Nor is it strange that the writers of the New Testament should affix a meaning to it different from the Greek writers of the day. The Greek writers, says Schleusner, used it not unfrequently, though, not always, to denote washing by immersion; but the writers of the New Testament use it in a figurative sense, denoting the application of water to the body as a religious rite, and a divine ordinance appointed for the purpose of initiating into the church, and for obtaining the remission of sins, and the purifying influences of the Holy Spirit. Hence, said Peter, on the day of Pentecost, 'Be baptized every one of you for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.' It follows, then, that unless other words and circumstances connected with baptism determine the mode of applying water to the subject, the word baptizo cannot.” And p. 56, “That nothing perfectly decisive respecting the mode of administering baptism, can be legitimately inferred from the word baptizo; nor from the prepositions connected with it. That although that word is used by Greek writers to signify 'to wash by immersion,’” yet they use it also to signify to wash by other means: that although there have been, and are men distinguished for literature, who understand it in its first and literal sense when used to denote the mode of initiation into the church; yet there have been, and are men of as great critical acumen and literary attainments, who contend, that it is not used in the New Testament in its literal, but in a figurative sense; in consequence of which it has changed its meaning from washing by immersion, to washing by pouring” water on the subject, in allusion to the pouring out of the Spirit as a spirit of regeneration; and every man of reading knows, that the number of the latter far exceeds that of the former. And certainly if a doctrine is to be established by the meaning of the word that conveys it, it must be by the meaning that the inspired penmen attach to it, and not that of heathen writers. So far, then, as we have conducted our review, there has nothing appeared to authorise Mr. Campbell to assert so roundly as he has done, that baptism is to be administered by immersion, and by immersion only,”
We now proceed to consider different cases of baptism, or different baptisms where they could not have been performed by immersion. Of John's baptism we have already spoken. We have seen it would have been impossible for him to have baptized by immersion so many as are said to have been baptized by him. *

Of the three thousand baptized on the day of Pentecost, we would observe, “that none but the twelve apostles had authority at that time to administer the ordinance of baptism; and as all this happened in the space of seven or eight hours, that there was not time for the twelve apostles to baptize three thousand persons by immersion, though practicable by affusion. To this it may be objected, that the seventy disciples of whom we read in the gospel by St. John, were no doubt present, and had a right to baptize as well as the twelve apostles. Be it so: but where was the water for the immersion of three thousand persons, many of whom must

* Mr. Ralston says, p. 57,” Both Matthew and Mark tell us, 'that Jerusalem, and all Judea, and the region round about Jordan went out to John's baptism, and were baptized of him.” What the exact population of Judea was at that time, I will not precisely say. But Josephus, their own historian, tells us, that seventy years afterwards, 1,350,000 of them were cut off in their wars with the Romans, as many more led captive, besides those that escaped, which probably amounted to more than one third of the whole population. We may therefore say, that there were four or five millions of inhabitants in Judea, to the days of John the Baptist. We will also suppose that only one million of them were baptized by him, although the words of the evangelists intimate that the greatest number were. It is the opinion of the best chronologists, that John did not exercise his ministry longer than eighteen months, and at farthest not longer than two years. I would now ask any thinking persons if it was possible for him to baptize one million, or near one million of persons, in that space of time, by immersion. But it was practicable by affusion, and upon the supposition that a number of them stood before him in ranks, and that he poured the water upon them from his hand, or from some suitable vessel.”

To this most absurd hypothesis of a wholesale baptism, or a baptism of crowds in the mass, by means of some suitable squirt or vessel which might extend to fifty or one hundred at one discharge, we know not what to say. It appears to me an act of degradation to notice such puerilities. I had really thought that no man in the nineteenth century could have demeaned himself so far as to introduce such a miserable salvo. Did we ever hear of two, ten, or twenty persons being baptized by one discharge of water!! Oh Pedobaptism, how art thou fallen!! even, according to this hypothesis, be immersed at the same point of time? Some tell us in the brook Kidron; but this brook was very small, and dry a considerable part of the year. Others tell us, that they could have been baptized in the Molten sea of the temple. But is it at all probable that the chief priests, who had the oversight and command of the temple, would suffer them to pollute it by administering an ordinance of the abhorred Nazarene? Besides; there is not the least intimation in the sacred history, that they removed from the place where they had at first assembled; and all could be done there, and without confusion, and with a few quarts of water, if done by affusion. From these few suggestions, and other circumstances that will naturally occur to the reader, he will draw his own inference, whether these three thousand were baptized by immersion, or by affusion, or pouring water on the head of the subject.”

“The baptism of Saul of Tarsus, recorded in the 8th, and of Cornelius and his friends, mentioned in the following chapter of the Acts, were administered, the one in the city of Damascus, and the other in Cornelius’ own house. It is merely said of Saul, that when Ananias laid his hands upon him, 'there fell from his eyes as it had been scales, and he received his sight forthwith, and arose and was baptized.' It is also said of Cornelius and his friends, that when the Holy Ghost in his miraculous gift of tongues fell upon them, Peter said, 'Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? and he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.' I would here only remark, that what is said of these baptisms, conveys the idea that they were baptized in the places where they were.”

Of the baptism of the eunuch we shall present our views in the words of the acute and profound J. P. Campbell, p. 74, “'And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch.' And Philip immersed him you say. The words assert no such matter, but only that they went into the water. The dipping is mere conjecture.
If the words 'went down into the water' describe or imply the eunuch's immersion, they imply no less the immersion of Philip; 'they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch.' And he baptized him: here, if any where, we ought to find immersion, but we have already proved that the word baptize [to baptize] does not, when used to describe a religious washing, signify to dip in a single instance; and of course the expression 'he baptized him' does not mean that Philip dipped him, but the reverse. Again; when they were come up out of the water. —Still it is not said that the eunuch was plunged, while in the water. You conjecture he was; and that is the most you can do: so that after distinctly reviewing the whole circumstances, we see nothing but conjecture at last, and all those potent proofs for dipping, of which we hear so much, leave us just where they found us, without proof. The translation I shall now give of the passage (and I am fearless to say it shall be literally exact) will obviate at once every thing like dipping. “And as they went on their way, they came to some water: and the eunuch said, Lot here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized! And he ordered the carriage to stop, and they both descended to the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him. And when they had ascended from the water,” &c. In this translation, which has at least the merit of being exact, we see nothing that indicates immersion, but much to countenance the opposite mode of baptism. In a country generally remarkable for scarcity of water, but most of all in the desert itself, Philip is joined to this noble traveler; they pursued their journey, conversing on divine subjects, till at length they reach some water. The eunuch points to the water, saying, Behold the water! What forbids my baptism? The prerequisites for baptism being arranged, they both descend from the chariot to the water; baptism is given, and as soon as they had ascended from the water, Philip is snatched instantly away to Azotus, and the baptized eunuch joyfully addresses himself to his journey. There, is no notice taken of changing raiment; no delays before or after baptizing: but this, like all the primitive baptisms, is rapid, instantaneous, and performed on the very scene of conversion. The circumstances go a great way I conceive to evince that the mode in which Philip administered baptism on this occasion, was affusion.”

Mr. CAMPBELL then arose:

I resume the subject of Greek prepositions. I invited my opponent to select two or three chapters, and examine he import of the prepositions as they occur. This would have been candid and honest on his part, and would have afforded us the same means of modern lexicographers for fixing their certain import. On the principles of Harris, the etymologyst, prepositions have no meaning but what arises from the context; and on the principles of Home Tooke, the most acute and profound etymologist, they have but one meaning. On either principle we could not fail in this method of trial. To make a selection such as Pseudo-baptists do, from Genesis to Revelation, of such peculiar occurrences as might render their meaning dubious, is neither the part of candour nor of propriety. As Mr. Maccalla has not complied with this equitable proposal, we shall proceed to examine a few chapters. We shall begin with the first chapter of Genesis. The first word is en, In the beginning, not near to, nigh, or at. En again occurs, verse 6, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, not nigh to, near, or at. Eis occurs for the first time, verse 9, Let the waters be gathered into one place, not towards, near to, or to. It occurs precisely in the same sense in the same verse, eis mian sunagogen, into one assemblage. En occurs, verse 11, whose seed is in itself, not near to, near, or at. It occurs in the next verse precisely in the same sense. Verse 14, Let there be lights in the firmament, not nigh to, near, or at. Eis occurs five times in this verse, for light, for signs, for seasons, for days, for years. For is the 8th meaning given by Parkhurst, and not any of those chosen by the Pedobaptists, as favourable to their hypothesis. Towards, near to, at, or to, being their selection; to which fur has no affinity. That for can be resolved to into, appears

NOTE. It will be necessary here to observe, that during the course of this day, some arguments were offered by Mr. Campbell, in proof of the proposition, “that infant sprinkling is injurious to the well-being of society, religious and political” As Mr. Maccalla made no reply to them, and as they came forward in Mr. Campbell’s different speeches, as opportunity served, it was not deemed expedient to derange the chain of connexion of the principal topics of the day, already too much entangled, by causing them to appear in their proper place. But that the arrears may be settled up, and commence on as clear grounds as possible the arguments of the next day, we shall here present a brief abstract of the evidences brought forward in sup. port of this proposition.

I. That infant sprinkling is an actual evil of a very high grade was argued from an analysis and brief exposition of sundry portions of Scriptures, particularly from 1 Sam. xv. The argument deduced evident from the meaning of into. Into, defined by Walker, is, “entrance beyond the outside;” being wholly confined within certain limits,” as, he has gone into the grave. Now when it is said that the stars were made for lights, for signs, for seasons, for days, and for years, it denotes that their province is “wholly confined within these limits.” So that when used figuratively, its meaning is resolvable to its literal import. Eis occurs in the same sense, verse 15, and en occurs in its appropriate meaning, in. the firmament, not nigh to, near, or at. Eis occurs twice in verse 16, in the same sense as in verse 14. En occurs, verse 17, in the firmament, as above. En, verse 22, occurs, “the waters in the sea,” not near to, at, nigh, or to. Verse 29, In itself seed, verse 30, in itself life; here en, as usual, signifies in, not near to, &c. Verse 30, eis occurs as in verse 14.

Chapter II. En occurs six times, viz. in the seventh day, in it he rested, he planted a garden in Eden, in the midst of the garden, in the garden; eis occurs seven times, viz. into his nostrils, into a living soul, for food, for sight, into four heads, made into a woman, made into one flesh. Ek occurs seven times, viz. out of the earth, out of the ground, a river went out of Eden, and out of the ground, bone out of my bone, flesh out of my flesh, because taken out of man. Apo occurs six times, viz. from his work, from his work, out of the dust, out of every tree, or out of or from the tree. He took a rib out of Adam.

from this chapter was as follows: Saul had received a positive command from the Lord by the mouth of his prophet Samuel, to “go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they had: to slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass.” The command was clear and precise. Saul, however, leaning to his own understanding, views of expediency, and feelings, did not precisely obey it, but “spared Agag the king, the best of the sheep, oxen, fatlings, and lambs; and destroyed every thing that was vile and refuse.” Samuel visited Saul; Saul salutes him thus: “Blessed be thou of the Lord: I hare performed the commandment of the Lord.” Saul seems to have thought that he had in substance obeyed it; that he had accomplished the Divine intention, and therefore appears quite cheerful in the presence of the prophet. Samuel, without returning any compliment, says, “What then meaneth this bleating of the sheep, and the lowing of the oxen in mine ears?” Saul replies, “They have brought from the Amalekites the best of the sheep and oxen to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God; but the rest we have Utterly destroyed.” Observe, Saul appears hero in the character of Chapters VII. and VIII. En occurs thirteen times, viz. in this generation, in the 600th year, in the second month, in the same day, in which there is life, in the ark, in the seventh month, in the tenth month, leaf in its mouth, in the 601st year, in the first month, in the second month. Eis occurs eight times, viz. seven times signifying into the ark, and once into a burnt-offering. Ek occurs four times, three times translated out of the ark, and once signifying out from his youth, or figuratively up from his youth. Apo occurs twenty-five times, viz. out of clean beasts, out of unclean beasts, out of fowls, out of fowls, beasts, and reptiles, five times in one verse, chap. 7th and 8th verse, out of all flesh, out of all flesh, from man from the earth, out of heaven; seven times from off equivalent to out of all flesh, out of all cattle, and out of all the fowls.

Ex. XIV. and XV. chapters. En occurs twenty-seven times, viz. in the land, in his army, by a lofty hand, in the land of Egypt, in this desert, in Pharaoh, in all his host, in all his chariots, in all his horses, in his chariots, in or by a strong east wind, in the morning, in the pillar of fire, in the midst of the sea, in that day, drowned in the sea, in power, a devout man, concerned for the glory of God, anxious to provide for the worship of God by splendid sacrifices, is confident that he has obeyed the main import of the command; and, with an apparently good conscience, takes the liberty of departing from the letter, while he supposes he has regarded the spirit of it. But Samuel sees no obedience in Saul's conduct, and asks him, “Why didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord?” He receives no thanks for what he has done; it is not considered as obedience. Saul, full of his own supposed obedience, contends that he did obey “substantially” the command, and insists that the intention was good in departing from a literal compliance with every minium for an object of so much importance. Samuel decidedly declares his conduct to be “rebellion and stubbornness,” and compares these to witchcraft, profanity, and idolatry, in malignity of guilt. “To obey,” says he, “is better than sacrifice; to hearken is better than the fat of rams.” He avers that the Lord has more delight in obedience than in all sacrifice. Saul is at length convicted, and exclaims, “I have transgressed the commandment of the Lord.” The Lord rejects him utterly as king of Israel. From this narrative we learn a good deal of the nature of obedience, and also how God the Judge of all views it.

It may be said by some, to heighten the malignity of Saul's crime, and to lessen the guilt of others who substitute a something called obedience in lieu of that which is properly so, that Saul deliberately in the midst of the sea, in the mighty waters, in among the gods, in holiness, in praises, in the midst of the sea, in her hand, in the wilderness, in the desert in Egypt. Eis occurs eighteen times, viz. into eternity or for ever, into the midst of the sea, into the midst of the sea, into the sea, into the midst of the sea, into the sea, into salvation, into the bottom, into thy resting-place or habitation, into the mount, into the place, into the sea, into the wilderness, into Marah, threw a stick into the water, into Elim. Ek occurs nine times, viz. out of Egypt, out of them, out on their right, out on their left, out of them not one, out on their right hand, and out on their left hand, out of their hand, out of Marah. Apo occurs three times, out of their presence, out of or from their presence, out from the Red Sea.

[The reader will see that Mr. Campbell has examined six chapters in the preceding investigation. He also read some portions of the New Testament, and made remarks upon them, too long for insertion; but we have only given the mere occurrences of the words and phrases, from which the reader may judge for himself.]

Now, my friends, from these unselected examples of the and wittingly transgressed, and that others are sincere and pious in substituting a supposed obedience for that which is true obedience. We do not assume the office of a casuist, and therefore merely submit the facts stated as illustrative of the nature of religious obedience, and particularly with a design of exhibiting the evil of departing from the commands of God, either intentionally or unintentionally. Uzzah seemed to have had a good intention in putting forth his hand to stay the ark of the Lord to prevent its being damaged; yet it cost him his life. Nor are we to suppose that under the Christian religion disobedience, innovation, or transgression of even positive institutes, are less criminal, or less liable to the frowns of heaven than under former ages. Many of the Corinthians were chastened with sickness, and some with death, for departing from the primitive design of the Lord's supper. But in relation to Pedobaptists it may be asked, Why produce the case of Saul? “We do not, on your own principles, transgress, add to, or diminish from, a divine command when we baptize our children; for, you say, we have no command for the practice at all.” Well, be it so. But you suppose that baptism is a duty to be performed in some way, a personal duty, and instead of yielding to the divine command, “be baptized every one of you for the remission of your own sins.” You substitute the sprinkling or baptism of your infants in lieu of your own obedience to the commandment which requires your own baptism. When thus viewed, infant baptism, is no use and application of these prepositions, you may easily judge of their import. We have read you a part of three of the plainest and most interesting narratives, where we might expect to find words used in their most appropriate meanings, the history of the creation, of the deluge, and of the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt. We have not knowingly omitted one single occurrence of one of them in their uncompounded state: and had we noticed them as they occur in composition, we should find their simple meaning greatly confirmed. Upon the whole you will easily discover, that if en does not, in respect of place, most definitely and certainly denote in, Adam never was in Eden, never was in innocence; that if ek does not denote out of, Eve was not made out of a rib taken out of Adam, nor were Adam and Eve driven out of the garden. That if eis does not most certainly and definitely denote into, breath of life never entered the nostrils of Adam, nor a living soul ever possessed our progenitors, that Noah and his house, the birds and beasts never entered the ark but only went towards or near to it. And that if ek and apo did not bring them out of, and from the ark, there they remain until this day. That if eis did not lead Israel and the Egyptians into the Red Sea, small evil, and is worthy of at least being compared with the scriptural facts adduced. You save yourselves from personal obedience by what you call “offering up” your children.

[The only allusion which Mr. Maccalla made to the preceding, was when commencing his next speech. —He said, “Well, my Pedobaptist friends, are ye not ready to be hanged for a crime equal to witchcraft? “]

II. Will worship is a worship founded upon the will of man, and not on the will of God. It is designated by the Saviour as vain. — “In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.” Will worship has ever been obnoxious to the wrath of heaven, because it is casting contempt on the authority of God, and has sometimes been marked with evident frowns of his displeasure, as in the case of Nadab and Abihu who offered “strange fire,” that was uncommanded fire, upon the altar of God. Now as the sprinkling of an infant is not founded upon any declaration of the will of God, but practised according to the will of men, it must necessarily be considered as mil-worship, and as such, is liable to his displeasure. And has it not been marked with his disapprobation? Read the history of the Pedobaptist church, beginning with the Romanists, and descending to the latest branch of this defection, and what appears to have been, and to be the state of those societies? Spoiled and plundered by an insatiate priesthood, torn by one division the former never passed through it, nor were the latter drowned in it. And if εἰ and ἀπο did not bring the Israelites out, they, with the Egyptians have sunk like lead in the mighty waters. And if all this evidence will not convince the honest inquirer after truth on this subject, we despair of being able to convince man that there is in him any thing superior to what is in other animals.

While so explicit in the department of propositions, we shall once more call your attention to the verbs bapto, raino, cheo, pluno, and louo, and from a few examples, shew that they are as certainly and as definitely expressive of different actions, as en, eis, and ek are different in application and meaning. Lev, xiv. 6—8, “Then he shall take the living bird, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet yarn, and the hyssop, and (perform one action, viz.) bapsei dip them, then he shall (perform another action, vis.) peri ranei sprinkle of the blood. Then he who is cleansed shall (perform another action, viz.) plunei ia imatia, wash his garments, and he must yet perform another action, viz. lousetai wash his body in water. After these four actions are performed (not one and the same action), he may come into the camp, but he must not enter his house for seven days, and until he has

after another, and in many instances sharing the fate of Ephraim joined to his idols, suffered to degenerate into a cold and lifeless formality: and worse than all, “the people love to have it so.” Innovation or departure from the revealed will of heaven is always marked with similar frowns; and Baptist churches may, as well as Pedobaptist societies, suffer much from other departures from the will of heaven, while zealous for the one baptism. While any society professing Christianity, is not walking in the comfort of the Holy Scriptures, it is owing to their departure from them in some respect.

III. But that infant sprinkling is injurious to the church, appears, we think, almost, if not altogether, self-evident from the fact, that its actual operation and effect is to introduce the world into the church. It has carnalized and secularized the church more than any other innovation since the first defection in Christianity. The actual tendency of infant sprinkling, is to open the gates of the church as wide as the gates of the world, and to receive into its bosom all that is born of women. That this may appear as obvious as the light of the sun, the reader has only to reflect, that if the Pedobaptist system prevailed, so that all the fathers and mothers in any country, or in all countries, were determined to have their infant offspring “initiated into the church” as soon as born, by the rite of sprinkling, then, in that country, or in all countries so acting, the discrimination between the world and the church would be lost; its gates would be as capacious as repeated two of those actions again: after shaving off his hair he shall repeat the action of washing his clothes, \textit{plunei ta imatia}, he shall wash his clothes and also another action, \textit{lousetai to soma}, wash his body in water, verse 9. In a subsequent part of the ceremony of cleansing a leper we shall find the actions of \textit{pouring}, \textit{dipping}, and \textit{sprinkling} contradistinguished in a similar manner, verse 16. Three actions are described. First action of the priest, he shall pour \textit{ekchei}, or pour out into his left hand. The second action of the priest is \textit{bapsei}, he shall \textit{dip} his right finger into the \textit{oil} in his left hand. Then comes the third action \textit{ranei}, he shall sprinkle it with his finger. Here we have \textit{bapto}, \textit{cheo}, and \textit{raino} occurring all together, as descriptive of three distinct actions—actions minutely described, essentially different, of ceremonial import, and clearly contradistinguished from each other. \textit{Sprinkle}, \textit{dip}, and \textit{pour}, are assuredly not one and the same in import in English, they denote three actions. In Greek, you see, their meaning is as distinct and as different as in English. In the same chapter again these words are contradistinguished, verse 26, And the priest shall (\textit{epi cheei}) pour into; and verse 27, he shall (\textit{ranei}) sprinkle; verse 41, he shall (\textit{ekchei}) pour out; those of the world, and without the necessity of regeneration, every member of the human family in that region or country, would have a place in the church. About one hundred years ago, the whole kingdom of Scotland, with the exception of, say two or three thousand individuals, was one great Pedobaptist society. In those days the church engrossed all that were born, and initiated them into it. Of course, all the enormities committed in the realm were committed by members of the church; so that none of the apostolic admonitions in which the difference betwixt the church and the world is pointed out, would apply to them.

In the year 1300, and for several centuries before, all the citizens of Germany, France, Spain, England, and indeed all the western Roman empire, with the exception of a few Baptists, were initiated into, what was then called, the church, as soon as the parents could have the right performed. In those days, and while those principles prevailed, the church was secularised) the church and state completely amalgamated, and all the follies and vices of childhood, manhood, and old age were engrafted upon the stock of Christianity. In those days Pedobaptist principles triumphed, and there never was a period in which the church was so completely and universally \textit{carnalized} and \textit{secularized}. Let it not be said that this was owing more to other traditions than to infant baptism or sprinkling; for when we grant that there were many other innovations and traditions besides this, and verse 51, he shall \textit{(bapsei)} dip, and last of all, same verse \textit{(peri ranei)} he shall sprinkle the house seven times.

The same marked difference between these three terms occurs Lev. iv. 6, 7, “And the priest shall \textit{(bapsei)} dip his finger, then he shall perform another action, he shall \textit{(pros ranei)} sprinkle before; then he shall, verse 7, perform a third action, \textit{(ek cheei)} he shall \textit{pour out} the blood at the base of the altar. Is it not most remarkable that we should so often find these three words occurring so close together; and so completely contradistinguished from each other, as if to put to silence the cavils of mistaken men! Take another instance or two of these words as given above, Lev. xvi. 24, \textit{lousetai to soma}, he shall wash his body; verse 19, \textit{(ranei)} sprinkle blood with his finger seven times; Num. viii. 7, he shall \textit{(peri ranei)} sprinkle; and in the same verse \textit{(plunousi)} they shall wash, \textit{ta imatia}, their clothes. Once more on this point. Num. xix. 18, 19, \textit{(Bapsei)} he shall dip \textit{(eis)} into the water, and \textit{(peri ranei)} he shall sprinkle it upon the house, and they shall pour out, \textit{(ek cheei)} and he shall \textit{(peri ranei)} sprinkle, and he shall \textit{(plunei)} wash his garments, \textit{(ta imatia)} and lastly, he shall \textit{(lousetai)} wash himself in water. In three verses here we have \textit{cheo} to pour,

we must insist that this contributed more than they all, to introduce that awfully corrupt system called antichrist; to nurture, to mature, and to perfect it. —It introduced \textit{all}, good and bad, into the church, and as had men invented errors, and propagated heresies in the church, we have only to ask how they got in, and then the true cause of the enormous mass of error of those days appears. It is a fact evident from church history, that the prevalence of corruption in the church bore pace with the prevalence of infant baptism, and that the triumphant days of the one, were the triumphant days of the other.

The description we have of the church, in the sacred Scriptures, leads us to consider all the members of it as \textit{“a peculiar people,” as born from above, as being all taught of God. Hence we read—“ a trilling people in the day of thy power mill come to thee; “” All thy children shall be \textit{taught of God}, and great shall be the peace of thy children;” “Every one that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me;” “To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God: even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.” Power or privilege to become the sons of God, was given to such only as were bora of God. How unlike this to the practice of Pedobaptists, who endeavor to crowd all into the church, which are born, not \textit{of God}, but of the \textit{will of the flesh}, and of the \textit{will of man}! Again, when we read the raino to sprinkle, bapto to dip, pluno to wash garments, and louo to wash the body. I presume there never was a disquisition upon the meaning of any set of words, capable of so clear and convincing proof, as that we offered upon these terms. I had many evidences to bring in proof of it, expecting that Mr. Maccalla would, by his attack, have given me an opportunity of bringing them forward, but as he now appears to be hastening from this discussion, without touching the main point, I was unwilling to let it close without bringing forward a few examples of the evidence we had in store for its complete triumph. Nothing, you see, can be more contrary to fact than the assertion that bapto, when used to denote a religious use of water, does not signify to dip or immerse; for in the religious uses of water, assigned under the law, words were never used in stricter conformity to their literal meaning than the words cheo, raino, pluno, bapto, louo. And this must have been so, where every thing depended upon a literal compliance with the prescriptions or requisitions. Now had our translators been at liberty to have translated this word to immerse, where the ordinance was spoken of, we should have had no controversy about it The command would then have read, “Go, and disciple all nations immersing them;” &c. “and he immersed him;” and “he arose and was immersed;” and “many of the Corinthians hearing, believed, and were immersed,” &c. &c. Had it not been for king James, this might have been the case, and so sensible were many of the Westminster creed-makers of the necessity of immersion, that, had it not been for Dr. Lightfoot, who gave the casting vote in favour of sprinkling in that assembly, all the believers in the Westminster creed would have been like all the eastern professors of Christianity, all those not under the pope of Rome, immersers and not sprinklers. The Pedobaptist writers are constrained to admit the three facts last stated, viz. that king James forbade the translation of baptizo and baptismos; that Dr. Lightfoot gave the casting vote that gave currency to sprinkling; and that all professors of Christianity that were free from the jurisdiction of the Roman pontiff, practice immersion. These considerations, together with the meaning of the word, the import of the prepositions used in connexion with this ordinance, put it beyond reasonable doubt that sprinkling is a human tradition.

As to those puerilities you have heard about John’s baptizing with a squirt, or some such thing in order to despatch _______ members by natural birth, and as the children of the flesh were constituted members. Infant sprinkling has, then, carnalized and secularized the church, and hence all Pedobaptist sects have become national churches, when they had it in their power; for their views of the church are carnalized as well as the members; hence papacy is the established religion of Italy, Spain, France, &c., Episcopacy of England and Ireland, and Presbyterianism of Scotland. In the United States, the principles of civil policy being better understood than any other country in the world, not any form of religion has obtained the exclusive patronage of the State; and may it continue so, till all sects be abolished, and all the children of God, united in faith, and hope, and love, shall know no bond of union but Christ: when party names, party love, and party zeal shall all be buried in one common grave, to rise no more fur ever!

IV. It deceives the child. It leads the stripling, as soon as he reflects, to think that there is some difference betwixt him and other unbaptized youths. That he is in a hotter state than they. That he is within some covenant, from which they are excluded, merely by the circumstance of his being sprinkled. That he is some sort of a member of the church, and more peculiarly favored by the influence of the church with heaven, than if he had not been sprinkled. If he think at all, or if he believe what his parents, the church, and the catechism teach him, such must be his reflections. He cannot the business, about the impossibility of the three thousand being immersed in one piece of a day; about Paul standing up to be baptized; about the jailer's not being able to find water sufficient for immersion, and a number of other such boyisms, they are not half so feasible as the arguments in favour of transubstantiation, of purgatory, of socinianism, of arianism, of praying to the virgin Mary, of doing penances by fasting and long pilgrimages. They are all put out of countenance by adverting to the fact that one person can immerse as many as another can sprinkle in a given time. There are well attested facts of sixty persons being immersed in thirty minutes, or in that proportion, when the baptizer simply immersed those led into the pool, or bath, or river to him. But allowing it to take three times as long to baptize one person, the twelve would have baptized the three thousand in little more than five hours. And suppose there were sixty or seventy baptizers, the whole number would have been baptized in less than one hour. And as to John's baptizing, we are told that the disciples of Christ, some of whom had been the disciples of John, baptized more disciples than John, even during the time of John's baptism. So that all those cavils, thrown in the way of an intelligent consider himself as called to repent in order to be baptized, but must view himself as having been washed from his sins in some sense without repentance. The 94th question of his Catechism explains to him the nature of baptism. He repeats it thus, “Baptism is a sacrament, wherein the washing [sprinkling] with water in the name, £. c. doth signify, and seal our engrafting into Christ, and partaking of the benefits of the covenant of grace, and our engagements to be the Lord's.” Assuredly the stripling that views his infant sprinkling in this light, is awfully deceived. “I was,” says he, “engrafted into Christ, and made a partaker of the benefits of the covenant of grace” when my papa had me baptized!!!

V. A fifth evil, necessarily attendant on this tradition, is, that it encourages superstition in the parent. He comes forward to the sacred basin with his tender infant in his arms, supposing that he ii now to dedicate his child to the Lord. He thinks he is performing an acceptable service. But were he peremptorily asked, Who has required thin at your hands? What answer could he give? Like the mail in the parable, he must Jiang his head, and remain speechless; or say, it was his priest. But this is not all. He takes upon him solemn vows, and obliges himself, by what he believes to be as solemn as an oath, to do certain things which God has not required him to do; he avows his sincere belief in creeds and formulas which he is to teach his child so soon as enviable: which, in the result, all Baptist, are like cobwebs on the path of a traveler. They are not so much as felt. The scarcity of water too is pleaded. You would sometimes think that Jerusalem could not afford more than a cup full of water, although you read of baths and pools of water in the city; and of a people who were continually in the habit of immersing, who were citizens of this same city!! These cavils are something like those you have heard about Ænon being a poor pitiful spring, that could not in a week supply a bath three feet deep, and a few feet square; and the imposition is passed off by such extracts as you have heard from Robinson.*

* Hear Robinson that same writer, whose words you have heard distorted from the context, p. 26. "Ænon, near it, was chosen for a place of baptism by John, because there was much water. Since sprinkling came into fashion, criticism, unheard of in all former ages, hath endeavoured to derive evidence for scarcity of water from the Greek text of the evangelist John, and to render polla hadata not much water, but many waters, and then by an ingenious supposition, to infer that many waters signifies, not many waters collected into one, but waters parted into many little rills, which might all serve for sprinkling, but could not any one of them be used for dipping: as if one man could possibly want many brooks for the purpose of sprinkling one person at a time.

It is observable that the rivers Euphrates at Babylon, Tiber at Koine, and Jordan in Palestine, are all described by polla hadata. Jeremiah speaks of the first, and addressing Babylon says, “O thou that dwellest upon many waters, thine end is come;” for Babylon was situated on what the Jews called the river, the great river Euphrates. The evangelist John describes Rome, which was built on the Tiber, by saying, “The great harlot, the great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth, sitting upon many waters.” Ezekiel describes Judea and Jordan, by saying to the princes of Israel, “Your mother is a lioness, her whelps devour men, she was fruitful by reason of many waters;” an evident allusion to the lions that lay in the thickets of Jordan. The thunder which agitates clouds, charged with floods, is called the voice of the Lord upon many waters: and the attachment that no mortifications can annihilate, is a love which many waters cannot quench, neither can the amount to this, that he will endeavor to make his child a true son of that sect or persuasion amongst whom he is a member at the time of taking upon him these engagements. He goes home, feels himself under obligations that neither arose from the authority of God, nor found any where but in his Confession of Faith; and he goes on in one dull round of superstitious observances, or he violates the vows he has taken upon him. Such is the fact, and such is the effect of this tradition in its Presbyterian, form. In the Episcopalian form it

I think, my friends, you have heard enough of Greek this time. I suppose Mr. Campbell expects to be made principal of the great national College now erecting in Virginia. He surely looks for some very high and dignified office suited to his extraordinary attainments and exalted genius. It was an act of presumption on my part to pretend to dispute with this great man, so well versed in ancient and modern tongues. You would think that he had the Septuagint by heart, and spoke Greek as his vernacular tongue. He has charged me with being grossly ignorant of my Bible, and not being able to quote it correctly.* It is true, my friends, that, my memory is very treacherous; and, my young friends

* Mr. Campbell, in his remarks on some quotations made by Mr. Maccalla, had said that he did not correctly quote from memory in almost any instance, and that he appeared not to have any one paragraph of a few verses so familiar as to refer to it without material alterations or deviations from the text, assumes other characteristics. A new species of beings, unheard of in the Bible, unknown amongst all the creatures of God, surround the priest These are called by a new name, not found in the nomenclature of heaven. They are God-fathers! None of this species entered the ark with Noah; and none of them were found in the family of Abraham. The same soil that produced infant baptism produced them. These two are engaging to perform that which they never do, and never can perform. But superstition makes the vow, and feels the obligation.

But the superstition does not end here; it is transmitted to the child, and debases his mind. The parent says, “I had you engrafted into Christ; I had you sealed into the covenant of grace; I engaged that you should be the Lord’s.” The child believes it, and questions neither the power of his father to do this, nor his veracity in saying he has done it. He tries to feel himself under some sort of an obligation arising from his father's conduct, which Sir Isaac Newton now in the prime of life, let me address you from my own experience. When young, my memory was not employed in treasuring up the Holy Scriptures; my youthful clays were squandered without committing the divine word to memory, and I now find that if this word is not committed accurately when young, when our memories are not surcharged with the cares of life, and burdened with a variety of concerns, it never can be treasured up. Do then, I beseech you, learn from me, to improve the passing hours, and to seize the present opportunity of storing your memories with divine truth.

I had, my friends, called your attention to the accounts we have of particular cases of baptism. What has my opponent said of them? He passes them by without ever adverting to the evidences they furnish; that there was no immersion there. He is not so ingenious, nor so accommodating as Mr. Judson in this instance. Mr. Judson evidently felt the force of the evidence drawn from those cases against immersion, particularly in the case of the jailer, and set about finding a salvo for it. This he did by telling us, p. 7, of a tank of water that was in the prison, of sufficient capacity for a bathing place. He tells us that the

____ could not explain. Yea, some children consider that they “became children of God, heirs of Christ, and inheritors of the kingdom of glory,” in their baptism. Little hope can be reasonably entertained, that those whose infant minds are thus biased can ever rise to that, noble independence of mind which is enjoined upon all the freemen of Christ in these words,” Gall no man on earth master or father, for one is your Father in heaven, and nil ye are brethren.”

Another consequence, if it can be called another, arising from this superstition, is, that it imposes, by the weightiest of all authority known on earth, viz. parental authority, a religion upon the conscience of the child, which it is taught never afterwards to call in question. This is the most cruel despotism. Hence we see many of those who are strictly brought up under their baptismal obligations, the veriest bigots, the most superstitious beings in the world. One dare not eat flesh upon Friday; another shudders at the idea of acting as a magistrate in a commonwealth that does not recognize the solemn league; a third fours the violation of a fast appointed by the church; a fourth dare not go to any other meeting than that of which he was made a member in infancy; a fifth must “go to the sacramental table” to fulfil his baptismal obligations; and a sixth, when come to manhood, must support his priest at the peril of “robbing God.”

VI. In the sixth place, this tradition ass the grand means of introducing an ungodly priesthood into the church, and of giving that prison yard in Calcutta is furnished with such a bath, and “that all the prison yards in the east, as well as the yards and gardens of private houses, are generally furnished” with tanks of water,” and then gravely infers that it was so one thousand eight hundred years ago.

Mr. Campbell’s dexterity in getting rid of all the difficulties arising from a careful investigation of those examples of baptism to which I have called his attention, is ‘characteristic of him. By the same kind of management he converts all the Pedobaptist writers of note into theoretic Baptists. You would think, from reading his strictures on Mr. Ralston, that Calvin, Beza, Luther, Owen, and others, were all convinced that \textit{baptizo} and \textit{baptisma} signified just what Mr. Campbell says he has proved to be their meaning. Mr. Ralston, indeed, in his late Review, has not only shewed the unfairness of such an attempt, but he has done more; he has proved that my opponent not only misrepresents the sentiments of the authors he quotes, but that he also puts words in their mouths which they never spoke. See p. 98. “Mr. Campbell,” says he, “quotes Dr. Owen as saying, that’ no honest man who understands the Greek tongue can deny the word to signify to dip; ” whereas, the Doctor’s words are, “no honest man who understands the Greek tongue can deny the word to signify \textit{to wash as well as to} dip.” To expose still farther the unfairness of Mr. Campbell in making Pedobaptists favour his views, we shall let you hear a number of those men speak their own sentiments; some of the very men he has made to speak in favour of his sentiments. Pond, p. 24—26. “Alstedius, 'The term baptism signifies both immersion and sprinkling, (aspersionem,) and of consequence ablution. 'Zelenus, 'Baptism signifies dipping, and also sprinkling.' Beza, 'They are rightly baptized who are baptized by sprinkling. 'J. Wickliffe. 'It matters not whether persons are dipped once, or three times, or whether water were poured upon their heads. 'Whitaker, 'The word baptizo signifies not only to dip, but also to tinge or wet.' Mastricht, 'Baptism signifies washing, either by sprinkling or dipping. 'Leigh, 'Baptism is such a kind of washing as is by plunging; and yet it is taken more largely for any kind of washing, even where there is no dipping at all. 'Lightfoot, 'The application of water is the essence of baptism; but the application of it in this or that manner, speaks but a circumstance. 'Dr. Featly, 'Christ no where requireth dipping, but only baptizing; which word Hesychius, Stephanas, Scapula, and Buddaeus, those great masters of the Greek tongue, make good by very many instances out of the classic writers, importeth no more than ablution or washing.' Dominicus, 'In baptism there minister, (for it requires Latin, Greek, and Algebra to enable a man to officiate as a Pedobaptist priest, because of the many dark things he has to explain and prove.) At the age of twenty they are both alike ungodly; but the temptation to induce B to join the church in the Pedobaptist way, is very weak in comparison of that of A, whose future destiny and prospects in life depend upon it. According to the natural course of things, then, there is a much likelier chance to have a larger proportion of ungodly teachers than of ungodly members in the same number of baptized infants. By members here, we mean members iii full communion. Of the Pedobaptist youths, many are training for the pulpit before they are convinced that Jesus is the Christ, and the inducements to mount the rostrum are much greater to those, than to others to sit down at the “communion table.” The latter if unrenewed by the truth, hare only their reputation at stake; the former have, as an inducement, besides their reputation, an honourable calling, a decent living at stake, as an inducement to avow what they do not feel. This being the natural cause of things, let us now examine its practical effects. The pulpits being filled with an ungodly priesthood, gave rise to 'confederations called ecclesiastical courts. These courts enacted canons, these canons interfered in many instances with men's civil rights, and generally issued in inquisitions is something essential, as the washing; and something accidental, namely, the washing in this or the other manner. 'Witsius, 'We are not to imagine that immersion is so necessary to baptism, that it cannot be duly performed by pouring water all over, or by aspersion. 'Calvin, 'Whether the person baptized he wholly immersed, and whether thrice or once, or whether water he only poured or sprinkled upon him, is of no importance. 'Dr. Owen, 'Baptism is any kind of washing, whether by dipping or sprinkling. 'Flavel, 'The word baptize, signifying as well to wash as to plunge, a person may be truly baptized that is not plunged. 'Dictionary of the Bible, 'To baptize is to sprinkle or wash one's body sacramentally. 'Glas, 'Immersion cannot be called baptism, any otherwise than it is a mode of washing with water. 'Ainsworth, 'To baptize is to wash any one in the sacred baptismal font, or to sprinkle (inspergere) on him the consecrated waters. 'Dr. Scott, 'Some contend that baptism always signifies immersion; and learned men who have regarded Jewish traditions more than either the language of scripture or the Greek idiom, are very decided in this respect. But the use of the words baptize and baptism in the New Testament, cannot accord with this exclusive interpretation. 'Dr. Adam Clarke, 'To say that sprinkling is no gospel baptism, is as incorrect as to say immersion is and persecutions. The Jewish priesthood and the papal priesthood are both proof of this. An hereditary membership, and an hereditary priesthood, were carried to the utmost perfection among the Jews. And how did they result? In hypocrisy, fraud, insolence, proscription, and persecution. The history of the Messiah's life and death, and that of his apostles, exhibit the spirit, temper, and character of a clerical fraternity, introduced to office by the silent efficacy of infant membership and hereditary right. And one, at least, of the designs of the Jewish religion, was, to be an ensample to us of the necessary tendency of such an institution under the best possible circumstances. That great Pedobaptist society called the catholic church, under whose auspices infant membership came to maturity, exhibits on a large scale the pernicious efficacy of infant sprinkling in these respects. Infant baptism, first of all, brought all the world into the pale of this church, with the exception of a few faithful ones who would not worship the beast. Over this worldly combination an avaricious, insolent, ambitious, blood-thirsty priesthood reigned. Those invented the torturing wheel, the red-hot pincers, the boiling lead, and all the engines of persecuting cruelty. To throw open to view the dungeons of the inquisition, to bring to open day the various apparatus of death, and to array all the ministers of torture in their appropriate dress on the none. Such assertions are as unchristian as they are uncharitable. Those who are dipped in water in the name of the Trinity, I believe to be baptized. Those who are washed or sprinkled with water in the name of the Trinity, I believe to be equally so; and the repetition of such a baptism, I believe to be profane. Others have a right to believe the contrary, if they see good. " "Such are some of the Pedobaptist authorities which Mr. Campbell has produced, for the purpose of proving that baptizo signifies to dip, and nothing else." “Indeed, the very consideration that they were Pedobaptists proves that their opinion with respect to the meaning of the word baptizo was the same as Dr. Owen's, Calvin's, Beza's, Mastricht's, and Leigh's; unless we believe that they were the very worst of men, who practised in divine things counter to their belief—but that was not their character.”

I shall now request you to attend to the spiritual allusion of baptism. Baptism alludes to something. The question is to what does it allude? I answer, without fear of refutation, that it alludes to the gracious influences of the Holy Ghost. The allusion of baptism to the baptism of the Holy Spirit is so plain, that we cannot think that any person who has attentively read the numerous references to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, where water baptism is spoken of, can solemn auto-de-fe, would be a task at which all our feelings revolt; for which our capacity fails; and to the accomplishment of which, language, copious as it is, is totally inadequate. Was there ever hatred like unto thy hatred; was there ever cruelty like unto thy cruelty, O thou spirit of an established triumphant creed—of an ambitious and aspiring priesthood!

But, my friends, unless it appears to be a fact that infant baptism necessarily tends, and has always tended to this state of things, why introduce these painful reflections? I admit that it would be altogether idle, and worse than beating the air.
But that such is its actual tendency, evidently appears from one fact, as well as from a hundred, viz. that every Pedobaptist thinks it his duty to introduce all his seed into the church as soon as born into the world; if, then, every member of any nation or state was a Pedobaptist, all the children born members of the state would be members of the church, consequently all the wicked, profane, cruel, and tyrannical in that region, would bo members of the church, and always prepared to act any scene, to adopt any means to effectuate their own designs. —In this sense, then, we are prepared to say that:

VII. A seventh evil resulting from this tradition, is, that it has, very generally, if not uniformly, in all sects produced a persecuting reasonably hesitate in assenting to the proposition “that water baptism is an emblem of spiritual baptism.” Indeed when water baptism was first preached by John, reference was immediately made to spiritual baptism. “I, indeed,” said John, “baptize you with water; but he that cometh after me, will baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire.” This being so, it is naturally to be expected that there would be a resemblance between the mode of water baptism, and the mode of spiritual baptism, or the manner in which the Spirit operates upon the human heart. Now let us inquire into the mode of spiritual baptism, and see what mode of baptism it favours. This the scriptures always represent under the idea of pouring and sprinkling. Joel ii. 28. represents it thus. “I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh.” This has a reference to what happened on the day of Pentecost, and is called by the Saviour a baptism; “you shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days hence.” Again, Prov. i.23. “I will pour out my Spirit upon you.” To the same purpose many other scriptures preach. “I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed.” “He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass, like showers that water the earth. So shall he sprinkle many nations. I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean.” Here you may observe, the baptism of the spirit. I hope it will not be necessary for me to bring forward documents in proof that such has been the fact; as it is the farthest from our designs to call to remembrance the deeds of former times, or to excite your feelings at the recapitulation of the misdeeds of many whose names are enrolled on the calendar of saints. We only wish to warn you, my Pedobaptist friends, of the tendency of your principles. We know that many of you deprecate persecution as much as we do, but you must see upon reflection, that so long as you crowd into the church all that is born into the world, and into the pulpit as many as you can raise so high, by all means, natural and mechanical; so long as there are ambitious and designing men born into the world, and of these some raised to power, so long your sect, as such, must necessarily contain within it the elements of persecution, and these elements will be always acted upon according to times, opportunities, and a variety of circumstances. Sometimes this persecution will be confined to the tongue, as was the case in the famous allegory: “He that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born of the Spirit.” “Even so it is now.” Sometimes it rises to lines and imprisonment, as in some of those free states. And sometimes it leads to the stake, as now in Spain, as lately in France, and, from the signs of the times, it may not be far distant from some others of the European states.
Holy Spirit is called a pouring out, a sprinkling. Now as water baptism is the appointed emblem of this pouring out and sprinkling of the Holy Spirit, the conclusion necessarily is, that the emblem should bear some analogy to the thing signified, consequently, that baptism is to be administered by pouring or sprinkling.

What Mr. Campbell has been telling you of the evils of infant sprinkling, as he calls it, will be noticed in their proper place, perhaps to-morrow.

So closed the fifth day. Adjourned to meet next morning at 10 o'clock.

Sixth day. Commenced at 11 o'clock, A. M. Mr. CAMPBELL commenced as usual:

After a brief retrospect, he proceeded to Acts viii. 36—40: and said, I will read you from the original a translation of this important passage of which you have already heard, and I stand here ready to defend it against all objections. “And as they went along the road, they came to (epi ti udor).” Epi leads them to, but not into; ti not some water, as J. P. Campbell translates it. Tis may be sometimes translated some when applied to persons, and also ti will make sense when translated some in some places, but not always, as for instance—he was in some city, for a certain city; but one

VIII. Not to be too tedious on this most painful part of the subject, we would only add, that infant baptism, or as it is now, infant sprinkling, has thrown the greatest obstacle in the world to the union of saints, and is, of all traditions, the most necessarily schismatical. While a Baptist is willing to embrace in the bosom of Christian fellowship every one that evinces his belief of the gospel, this tradition lies in the way, inasmuch as it prevents the subjects of it from obeying that command of Christ, without which none were admitted into the Christian church. While other errors and mistakes could be surmounted, after the parties were united, this lies in the very door, and at once precludes union. And that this is to be charged to infant sprinkling is evident from this consideration, viz. that the Pedobaptists must, and do acknowledge our baptism to be valid, an ordinance of Jesus Christ, and would therefore gladly receive Baptists into their communion, but we cannot acknowledge their observance to be any thing more than a human tradition, as setting aside the command of God, and as preventing the subject from the testimony of a good conscience, arising from his own obedience. It is no violation of principle; it is no countenancing of human tradition; it is no setting in some place testified, for a certain place. He limited a some or some day, for a certain day; a some looking for of judgment, for a certain looking for. These and a hundred other instances shew that the general moaning of the term is properly certain, or a certain. However, we see nothing gained to Pedobaptists by rendering it some, for some water does not necessarily mean a few drops. But it is a certain water, and the eunuch says. Behold water; what prohibits me to be immersed? And Philip said, it thou believest with all thine heart, it is lawful for thee—and they both descended, or went down, not epi to, but eis into, (he water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he immersed him, and when they went up ek out of, not from the water, Sec. We have followed the genera! rules for translating, and the common or literal meaning in every instance. The prepositions ana, up, and kata, down, add very much to the emphasis of the narrative, and confirm the rendering given in the common translation as just and literal.

To aid the sprinkling “mode,” Mr. Maccalla calls forward the “allusive meaning” of baptism, and makes it out to be an emblem of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. This is passing strange. Must every thing be perverted to favour the darling rite! Now we utterly deny that baptism was aside of the divine command for Pedobaptists to propose to receive Baptists into their communion: but it is all this and more, for a Baptist to propose to receive a person into the communion of saints, who has never obeyed the divine command; who has never been washed to obtain the format forgiveness of his sins; who has but the testimony of men that he was sprinkled in his infancy; and who would be always deprived of the privileges of baptism, if we should admit him into the church in an unbaptized state. While we would not impose any item of human invention; while we would not demand subscription to any human creed, formula, or covenant, as terms of admission into the church; while we would bear and forbear with a very great diversity of opinion upon many topics, provided the one faith, in the one saving fact, that Jesus is the Christ, was clearly, and explicitly, and intelligibly expressed; we have to reject this anti-Christian tradition as a manifold evil, and to ”nil upon all those who teach, or practice, or receive it, to repent, and put away this mil from among them, as making void the commandment of God, as imposing upon the conscience of the young and unsuspicious, as introducing the world into the church, as placing an ungodly priesthood over the people, as issuing in persecution unto death, and as throwing an inseparable barrier in the way of those who else “like kindred drops had mingled into one.”
at all designed to be emblematic of the Spirit's operations. So far is it from fact, that baptism refers to the forgiveness of sins, and was administered for this purpose as already proved, and many after having been subjects of gifts of the Holy Spirit were immersed in water. So that they must have received the emblem and the thing signified by it in one and the same day; perhaps, in one and the same hour, as the gentle congregation in Cornelius’ house. For as soon as the Holy Spirit fell, or spiritual gifts were poured out upon them, Peter asks, Can any man forbid water, which in this connexion is equivalent to, “can any Jew forbid baptism to these gentiles, although a gentile was never before baptized?” The grounds on which he predicates his plea is, that “they having received the heavenly gift just as we Jews did at first on Pentecost, are therefore as worthy subjects of baptism as we.” Was there ever such an emblem!! The thing signified precedes the emblem!! The thing signified and the emblem to be connected in one and the same hour!! It is a perfect anomaly.*

But we have already shown that the baptism of the Holy Spirit had a reference to the confirmation of spiritual gifts, or as now called miraculous gifts in the apostolic age, and that no man can be said now a-days to be baptized in the Holy Spirit. To this Mr. Maccalla has not adverted. Upon the whole, nothing can be more unscriptural than to affirm that baptism is an emblem of the Spirit's influences, seeing the apostles declare baptism to have reference to the washing away of sin by the death and resurrection of Christ, and

* The whole argument, from the baptism of the Holy Spirit to “water baptism,” is predicated upon the following sophism. Suppose a controversy should arise about the present “mode” of marriage a thousand years hence; and he that espoused the mistaken side should argue thus: “A man in those days was said to be wedded to virtue; now this was an emblem of a literal wedding, therefore, as we all understand how a man is wedded to virtue, and pursues a virtuous course, without any formality;--therefore he that chooses a wife, and lives with her, is wedded without any formality, and was a thousand years ago said to be married.” This is precisely the Pedobaptist sophism; with this small difference, which makes the sophism more gross--that the Pedobaptists confess they do not understand the mode of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and yet argue from it as though they did.
that being born of water and of the Spirit are two distinct things, and not the one an emblem of the other.

His application of the words, “so shall he sprinkle many nations,” is availing himself of a mistaken rendering which Junius and Tremellius have corrected; it reads, “So shall he astonish many nations.”

Mr. Maccalla deals much in general innuendoes. I should be glad if he would come to specifications. He has told you Mr. Ralston has proved me guilty of misrepresenting and misquoting the words of Pedobaptists. But where is the proof? He has only specified one instance; the words of Dr. Owen. Now what if it should appear that Mr. Ralston and Mr. Maccalla have actually misrepresented me in this one instance I Let us see. Mr. Ralston, p. 98, says Mr. Campbell quotes Dr. Owen as saying, “that no honest man who understands the Greek can deny the word to signify to dip: whereas the Dr. says to wash as well as to dip.” Now let us examine the strictures, p. 256, my words are, “Let us next hear Dr. Owen; for the original and natural meaning of baptizo signifies to dip, to plunge, to dye, to wash, to cleanse.” Have we not here quoted the Dr. as saying that it signified to wash? where now is Mr. Ralston's and Mr. Maccalla's regard to honesty!! Every effort these gentlemen have made to fasten misrepresentation on me has reverberated on themselves. I have in those strictures proved misrepresentation after misrepresentation upon Mr. Ralston, and in no instance can either he or Mr. Maccalla adduce one such instance in my strictures. Let Mr. Maccalla now try it, or for ever after hold his peace.

But because I have quoted Calvin, Luther, and many other Pedobaptists as declaring that baptizo signifies to immerse, to dip, to plunge literally, Mr. Maccalla and Mr. Ralston are exceedingly exasperated, and would have such concessions construed into insignificant words, seeing those men practised sprinkling. But why did they practise sprinkling? most certainly not because they supposed this to be either the meaning of the term, or the ancient practice. Why then? I will let Calvin declare. Hear him. Hear him nay friends—“The church did grant liberty to herself since the beginning to change the rites somewhat, excepting the substance.” This is the reason, then, why they tolerated sprinkling; and their concessions are unimpaired by this declaration. Some pages of Mr. Ralston's illnatured criminations for quoting those concessions assume the gaseous form in the presence of these words of Calvin. The fact is, those learned Pedobaptists conceded the points at issue now, but pleased themselves with the supposed power the church had, from the beginning, of “CHANGING THE RITES SOMEWHAT.” Hence they change immersion into sprinkling, and a river or a bath into a basin. For “Calvin, Arctius, Piscator, Grotius, and MacKnight declare that the reason why John baptized at Ænon was, because the water was deep enough to immerse.” The only question between those learned Pedobaptists and us, is, not about the meaning of baptisma, for in this we agree, but about “this right the church granted herself.” We allege the essence of popery is contained in this right or assumption; those men did not see this, or if they did, did not think proper to abandon it. I fearlessly affirm that the Presbyterian church is founded on the very principle assumed in those words of Calvin. They have granted unto themselves the liberty of changing the rites somewhat, sometimes scarcely retaining the substance.

Mr. Maccalla has more than once represented me as very ostentatious of my acquaintance with the original scriptures, and as merely displaying my erudition for the sake of gratifying my vanity. I can appeal to this whole assembly if any such ting has appeared in my address. That I have not in one instance made one such effort, is, I presume, evident to every impartial observer. Indeed, this is neither the subject nor the occasion for any such display. A person who has devoted his whole life to study could gain very little applause from a triumph gained over such criticisms, as is generally detailed by such Pedobaptist critics. What honour could be gained from an encounter with a gentleman, a reputed linguist too, who, like Mr.
Maccalla and Mr. Ralston, could bring forward “anastus” in the case of Paul as a proof that he was sprinkled, “he arose” and was immersed? A word used a thousand times to denote the first effort, or the first stage in a process to any object. It would have been no way repugnant to the nature of the case to have sprinkled Paul sitting on his chair, or lying on a couch, or on his knees, if sprinkling an infant, reclining on its nurse's arms, was in those days usual. But the reason of this abusive caricature is simply this, Mr. Maccalla conscious of his own incompetency to make a single criticism, or to defend one of his own, shrewdly considered if he could work upon my modesty, so as to make me ashamed to even mention a Greek word, he would then escape exposure; for I am told he has affected, to be a very profound linguist even in this very place, and on a certain occasion defamed the illiterate Baptists. But the fact is this, Mr. Maccalla is unacquainted with Greek, and I now say he cannot, in my opinion, read one chapter in the Septuagint, if his life depended on it. Here it lies before me, and he can easily have an opportunity of convincing both you and me that I am mistaken. Until this is done, or until he makes and defends one criticism of his own, we shall retain this opinion, which, indeed, I am convinced is well founded. It matters not however, seeing he details the criticisms of others which, he says, are the best critics in the world, and a refutation of their criticisms is more important than a refutation of his. This I should have passed over without notice, had not his repeated exclamations rendered it necessary.

Mr. Maccalla commenced: —

I can go down into the water and talk Greek all the time, and come up out of the water and not be immersed either. How often do we say such a person went down into the river and came up from it, or out of it, when no body thinks he was immersed. I have rode down into, and through a river, and came up out of it, and not a drop touched me.

I have heard the quotation from Calvin which my opponent lays so much stress on, as affording a reason why he should declare, that to immerse is the meaning of baptizo, and at the same time practise affusion; but I believe Calvin used those words not to account for his practice of infant affusion, but to reprove the Roman Catholics for having changed the forms of religious worship. If so, then, this application of his words is a gross perversion, and reflects no honour on the honesty of Mr. Campbell in adducing them as a proof, of what was very far from the sentiments of that eminent reformer.

Every person of good sense considers the church of Christ as the salt of the earth, and not as a nuisance, as Mr. Campbell would represent it. For in fact, if the church had taken the liberties which Mr. Campbell says it has, it ought to be viewed as a sink of corruption, rather than as the salt of the earth or the light of the world. I hope he will not palm such miserable stuff” upon your consciences, my Pedobaptist friends.

He has told you that Junius and Tremmellius have proved the translation, “So shall he sprinkle many nations,” to be a false one. You shall hear Junius and Tremmellius speak for themselves.

“Ita persperget (stupore) gentes multas propter cum obdent reges as suum, quando quod non narratum fuerat eis videbunt, et quod non andierant animadvertent” It is admitted that they and the Septuagint translate it as equivalent to astonish. But this astonishment was effected by sprinkling them. See Burder’s Oriental customs, pp. 198, 199.

He has declared more than once that there is now no baptism of the Holy Spirit. So did Mr. Judson, and some other Baptists. But Paul declares, 1 Cor. xii. 13. —“By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body.” This was spoken Song after Pentecost, and after the calling of the Gentiles, on which he has declaimed so much. All Christians. ire lo this day baptized by one Spirit into one body, the church.

But we proceed to show you, my friends, that our practice of infant baptism is capable of being traced back from the present day to the age of the apostles. Our opponents say that we depend upon the fathers alone for our authority, such as Augustine and his contemporaries, but this is only one of their slanders unworthy of belief. I can shew you by undeniable documents that infant baptism has been practised in every age since the apostolic. Indeed we never refer to the fathers as unexceptionable authorities, but they are proof of the antiquity of the practice, and afford evidence of its continuance after the apostolic age in the primitive church. For this practice, which commenced with the apostles, did not cease with their lives, but continued and spread with the increase of Christianity in all countries, and has descended down to our times, notwithstanding the opposition of the ancient Anabaptists and the modern. The Papists have endeavoured to throw their influence into the scale with the Baptists, and have asserted that infant baptism is a human tradition, or a tradition of the church., and very much please the Baptists when they tell the protestants that they have borrowed infant baptism from them, and that they ought to borrow from them a great many other traditions which they pretend to be of equal importance, and to depend upon the authority of their church alone, which they hold infallible in these respects. Like the fox, the bear, and the lion in the fable, they would, in this way, come in and bear off the prey. But avaunt such policy. We do not borrow infant baptism from the papists, we borrow it from the apostles, and from Moses, and from the prophets. Nay, we go back to Abraham the father of the faithful, and we find the same grand principle developed by the apostles in their writings, and handed down to us. It is true that Mr. C. shews that the ancient administrators of baptism, some of whom he calls the fathers of the Roman Catholic church, had some opinions about infants and baptism incompatible with those which we hold. He thus represents the matter, Debate at Mount Pleasant, pp. 119, 120.

It is really astonishing that Mr. Campbell would hold out the idea that the views or opinions of the administrators should change the nature or mode of baptism. Their having even wrong views of the design or meaning of baptism does not impair the evidence of the fact, that Christian baptism was administered to infants.*

Mr. CAMPBELL then arose: —

And so it appears that Mr. Maccalla has done with the “mode” of baptism, and is about opening the history of the church to prove the antiquity of infant baptism. And has it all come to this, that Mr. Maccalla with Mr. Ralston and others, can only argue the figurative meaning of baptizo against the literal; that “the writers of the New Testament use it in a figurative sense!!” † Unparalleled circumstance! The only occurrence since Revelation began, that the word which enjoins a religious action is to be taken figuratively!! But Mr. Ralston long since concluded “that nothing perfectly decisive respecting the mode, can be legitimately

* On the same principle Mr. Robinson, being a Socinian, will not impair the evidence he adduces, in proof that sprinkling infants is a human tradition.
† Ralston, p. 54, as quoted by Mr. Maccalla, inferred from the word baptizo, nor from the prepositions connected with it.” We must then, like the Pedobaptists, illegitimately infer that sprinkling is a figurative meaning of baptismos! Really I expected more from my opponent than this, to propose a new discussion upon old exploded grounds! He has not advanced a new idea. He has not even been so fortunate as Mr. Ralston, who discovered, p. 56. that the preposition eis will take a man into heaven or into hell, but not into the water, for this astonishing reason, “that the preposition eis does signify into before heaven and hell, but not before Jordan, for that would lead us into the water. “It was not,” says he, “the meaning of eis as connected with heaven and hell, but as connected with baptism, the late Mr. Campbell alluded to in his disquisition upon prepositions!” Happy result, nothing can be decided from Greek but that baptizo is used figuratively, not literally, in the New Testament! And this is proved, as the Romanists prove praying to the virgin Mary to be right, viz. that the number of those who contend that it is used figuratively, “far exceeds” that of those who contend that it is used literally. See Ralston, p. 56.

We have a great deal yet to say about this modus operandi, and shall therefore say a little in the way of additional evidence. But first to Calvin again. Mr. Maccalla, as I expected, fairly committed himself on the quotation already read from Calvin. I did not tell you where this quotation was to be found, that I might see whether Mr. Maccalla would fall into such an explication as he gave you of it. He has done what I anticipated; I will therefore read you the whole concession from Calvin. He was not, as Mr. Maccalla supposed or believed, writing against the Romanists, but he was commenting on that memorable passage, Acts viii. 38., on the baptism of the eunuch. His words, Com. on Acts viii. 38., “We see, from this instance, what was the baptismal rite amongst the ancients; for they plunged the whole body in the water. Now Us the CUSTOM, for the minister to sprinkle only the body or head.” He adds by way of explanation, “It is certain that we want nothing which maketh to THE SUBSTANCE of baptism. Wherefore the church did grant liberty to herself since the beginning to change the rites somewhat, excepting the substance.” Where now is Mr. Maccalla's excuse for Calvin!
Mr. Maccalla gave you a list of Pedobaptist names testifying the meaning of baptism. Three or four of them say that baptism signifies sprinkling as well as dipping; but not one of them says that the Greek word baptizo signifies to sprinkle; and but few of them say what the meaning of baptism is, but only tell their opinion of what will suffice—take Lightfoot for a specimen, “The application of water is of the essence of baptism; but the application of it in this or that manner speaks but a circumstance,” This is merely an opinion of the man who curried his opinion at Westminster, in making the Confession of Faith, against half the Assembly, save one. This is his cloud of witnesses; yet of these men, Beza, Leigh, and others, positively agree with Calvin, who explicitly declares in his Ins. c. xv. sect. 19, “The very word baptizo, however, signifies to immerse, and it is certain, that immersion was the practice of the ancient church.” And in this declaration, Luther, Hammond, Chambers, Casaubon, Zanchius, Mede, Chamier, Seapula, Stephens, Grotius, Whitby, Passor, Erastus, Selden, Daniel Rogers, Pool, Piscator, and a host of other Pedobaptists, eminent for their learning, and commentaries, agree. [Mr. Campbell read the testimonies of several of them, from Strictures on Ralston, from pp. 256-258] Remember, my friends, that while they candidly declared the import of the word, and the practice of the ancient church, they departed from both, on the principle of Calvin, who pleaded “the liberty which the church took from the beginning, of changing the rites somewhat, excepting the substance,” and not from either the meaning of the word, or from the practice of the primitive church.*

To these I will now add a few testimonies from church history. Mosheim, you know, not very partial to the Baptists, says, “The sacrament of baptism was administered

* In the Helvetic Confession of Faith for the Protestant churches of Switzerland, drawn up by the direction of Bucer, in 1536, and ten years before the death of Luther, and re-published in 1566, by the pastors of Zurich, we have the following declaration in favour of immersion: Baptism was instituted and consecrated by God; and the first that baptized was John, who dipped Christ in the water, in Jordan. From him it came to the apostles, who also did baptize with water.”

The Confession of Faith adopted by the Saxon churches, and written by Melancthon in 1554, perfectly agrees with the above: --It in this century without the public assemblies, in places appointed and prepared for that purpose, and was performed by immersion." Cent. i. part 1. c. 3. —He also says, "Those who had formed the resolution of amending their lives were initiated by John into the kingdom of the Redeemer by immersion." Gregory, in his Church History informs us, "that baptism in the primitive times was administered by immersion." Vol. i. p. 63 & 89, quoted by Chapin. Dr. Cave in Ms Primitive Christianity attests, "that the action says, "Baptism is an entire action, to wit, a dipping and a pronouncing these words, 'I baptize thee,' &c. See Dr. Baldwin's letters to N. Worcester, p. 87."

"These two Confessions are not to be considered as the testimony of two men, or of two churches, but as the united belief of a number of churches in two large districts."

"The assembly of divines, that body of men who composed the catechism, in their annotations on Col. ii. 12, "buried with him in baptism," say, "In this phrase the apostle seemeth to allude to the ancient manner of baptism, which was to dip the parties baptized; and, as it were, to bury them under the water a while, and then to draw them out of it, and lift them up, to represent the burial of our old man, and our resurrection to newness of life."

"Rogers says, 'None of old were wont to be sprinkled; and I confess myself unconvinced by demonstration from scripture for infant sprinkling. It ought to be the churches' part to cleave to the institution, which is dipping, and he betrays the church, whoso officer he is, to a disorderly error, if he cleave not to the institution, which is to dip. That the minister is to dip in water is the meetest act, the word. baptizo notes it. For the Greeks wanted not other words to express any other act besides dipping, if the institution could bear it. What resemblance of the burial or of the resurrection of Christ is there in sprinkling? All antiquity and scripture confirm that way (to immerse). To dip, therefore, it is exceedingly material to the ordinance, which was the usage of old, without exception of countries, hot or cold."

"Says Stackhouse, 'Several authors have shewn that we nowhere read in scripture of any one's being baptized but by immersion, and from acts of councils and ancient rituals (they) have proved that this manner of immersion continued as much as possible to be used for thirteen hundred years after Christ.' (His History of the Bible, book 8, chap. i. pp. 291, 292.)

"Says Dr. Whitby: 'It being so expressly declared here, (Rom. vi. 4; Col. ii. 12.) that we are buried with Christ in baptism, by being buried under water, and the argument to oblige us to a conformity to his death, by dying to sin, being taken hence; and this immersion religiously observed by all churches for thirteen centuries, and approved by our church, (Church of England) and the change of it into sprinkling, even without any allowance from the author of the insti-having proceeded thus far, the person to be baptized was wholly immersed or put under water.” Ed. 7. p. 203. Robinson, in his History of Baptism, shews that all the eastern churches that were not under the Roman pontiff, ever have practised, and to this day practise, immersion. — Eusebius declares his doubts, whether the besprinkling of a person who lay on a sick bed could be called baptism, p. 113.

His quotation from Junius and Tremmellius is of the same character, why did he not give their criticism in their own words thus, Ita, nimirum ex comparatione tantae objectionis et gloriae Christi, et bonorum, quae hoc pacto nobis afferuntur admiratione. Obdent, id est, non obloquuntur sed silentium praestabunt dociles ad praedicationem Evangelii.

Mr. Maccalla pleads 1 Cor. xii. 13. as evidence of the present baptism of the Holy Spirit. According to MacKnight “this had reference to the miraculous baptism John Baptist foretold.” He-translates, “for indeed (en) in one spirit we all have been baptized (eis) into one body, whether Jews or Greeks.” Upon the whole, this passage evidently refers to the spiritual gifts conferred upon the primitive church, as the apostle declared in the first verse; that he was, on set purpose, treating of those gifts now called miraculous, then called spiritual; such as gifts of tongues, of prophecy, of healing, of interpretation of tongues, and which were equally conferred upon Jews and Gentiles “in the days of the Spirit.” Consequently it is a gross perversion to apply it to what are now called the ordinary operations of the Spirit.

which the Romanist still urgeth to justify his refusal of the cup to the laity; it were to be wished that this custom might be again of general use, and aspersion only permitted, as of old, in cases of the clinici, or in present danger of death.”

“Nor was Dr. Whitby alone in his desire for the return of immersion. Many of the most learned, pious, and eminent divines, yea, the clergy of. England in general, expressed a desire for the return of this ancient practice. These eminent men, in argument for the restoration of immersion, plead the sense of the word; they plead the ancient usage of the church, and even the practice of the church in their own time. To the advocates of sprinkling they said, “Divide the Christian world into three parts, and you will find that all Asia, all Africa, and one third part of Europe do at this day baptize by immersion.” (See Stackhouse’s body of Divinity.) —Chapin, p. 27.
*Mr. Maccalla commenced:

By alleging that the word baptism, and the word infant, were variously understood by the ancients. Some called baptism regeneration, others called it salus salvation, others the Christian circumcision, and others a custom. Some had called children of seven, ten, and twenty years of age, infants, but that the decision of the sixty-six African bishops in the time of Cyprian had decided what kind of infants were to be baptized, infants of a few days old. The controversy then being, not whether infants should be baptized, but whether on or before the eighth day. He here quotes “the bitter hearted Robinson,” and rebukes him for his animadversions on Austin, p. 204. He then goes on to prove that infant baptism has been practised from the present time up to the reformation—and from the reformation up to the 4th century, and then commences his formal proof that it was practised from the fourth century up to the apostolic age. On opening Dr. Wall, he produces the testimony of the learned Baptist Whiston, who testifies that “Dr. Wall's history of infant baptism as to fads appears to me most accurately done, and may be depended on by the Baptists themselves.” He affirms that Wall and Mr. J. P. Campbell can never be answered, and eulogises the fidelity, labour, and candour of the great Dr. Wall. †

Mr. Maccalla after alleging that the Waldenses were not Baptists, and after quoting the words of Milner, who says,

* We shall be under the necessity of comprising the argument on the antiquity of infant baptism within narrower limits than at first intended. We had written out the argument on both sides in full length; but finding it impossible to be inserted in the proposed limits of this volume, notwithstanding we have thrown much matter in small type into the margin, we have been compelled to condense it, and to present in one view what was spoken at three intervals by Mr. Maccalla and Mr. Campbell. We have given all the documents in the present abstract, and have only abbreviated the remarks.—Amer. Edit.

† Mr. Campbell, in the commencement of his next speech, observed, “Seeing my opponent has spoken in such high terms of the literary reputation, and honesty of Dr. Wall, it is unnecessary for me to pronounce encomiums upon him, though I feel disposed to honour him for his candor. But what seems to me very unfair, and very singular too in my opponent and other Pedobaptists, is, that while they compliment and extol Dr. Wall as an honest historian, as a faithful
“I cannot find any satisfactory proof that the Waldenses were in judgment, Anti-pedobaptists strictly.”* Vol. 3. p. 426. he goes on to the primitive fathers. He begins with Augustine, whose character is thus given by his friend, Mr. J. P. Campbell, Remarks p. 88. “He was in his day a

* Mr. Miller says, Vol. iii. p. 427, “I lay no great stress on the subject (whether they were Baptists), for they might have been a faithful, humble, and spiritual people, as I believe they were, if they had differed from the general body of Christians on this article.” It is well proved by W. Jones, and other ecclesiastical writers, that they were Baptists in judgment and practice.

Mr. Macalla also quoted Cassander as affirming that the apostles baptized infants. Now Menno himself was a Baptist!! This Cassander had two debates with the Baptists in his time, he declared that the Albigenses were the first that denied infant baptism. That Peter de Brus, A. D. 1110, and his disciple Henry, had taught that infants ought not to be baptized. They made many converts. —Du Pin, Vol. iii. p. 702. fol. edit.

witness, they will only receive half his testimony, and will reject the other half. If I call upon a witness and compliment his honesty, fidelity, and capacity, it is treating him very ill to tell him that I only believe the half of what he says. But as Mr. Macalla has eulogized Dr. Wall so highly, I hope he will receive his whole testimony. We shall then read you an important item of his testimony, p. 402. 'That immersion was the practice of the ancient church is so plain and clear, by an infinite number of passages, that as one cannot but pity the weak endeavours of such Pedobaptists as would maintain the negative of it, so also we ought to disown and show a dislike of the profane scoffs which some people give to the English Anti-pedobaptists, merely for their use of dipping. It was in all probability the way in which our blessed Saviour, and for curtain, was the most usual and ordinary way by which the ancient Christians did receive their baptism. It is a great want of prudence as well as of honesty, to refuse to grant to an adversary, what is certainly true, and may be proved so. It creates a jealousy of all the rest that one says. —As for sprinkling, I say as Mr. Blake at its first coining up in England, let thorn defend it who use it. They who are inclined to Presbyterianism are hardly prevailed on to leave off that scandalous custom of having their children, though never so well, baptized out of a basin or porringer, in a bed chamber; hardly persuaded to bring them to church; much farther from having them dipped, though never so able to bear it.' This is a just reproof to which ray opponent should attend, and from which he should be admonished to abandon those scoffs as Dr. Wall calls them, against the Baptists. But hear the Dr. again, part 2, c. 9. ‘France seems to have been the first country in the world where baptism by affusion was used ordinarily to persons in health, and in the public way of administering it. It being allowed to weak children (in the reign of burning and shining light; and he has been ever since, by his writings, one of the brightest luminaries of the Latin church. A man of warm unaffected piety, of the greatest natural talents, and the highest attainments; exercised in the assiduous study of the Holy Scriptures, replete with sacred learning, and withal deeply versed in that Pagan lore, in which, however it may have been of late shamefully calumniated, the soundest divines have always been the greatest proficients. In polite literature he was the rival, in science and philosophy the superior of his great contemporary, St. Jerome.” His testimony is in the following words, “This is held as tradition by the universal church, when little infants are baptized, which certainly are not yet able to believe with the heart, or confess with the mouth, and yet no Christian will say that they are baptized to no purpose. He then goes on to remark, that as it happened to Isaac, who received the seal of the righteousness of faith

Elizabeth) to be baptized by aspersion, many fond ladies and gentlewomen first, and then by degrees, the common people would obtain the favour of the priest to have their children pass for weak children, too tender to endure dipping in the water. As for sprinkling, properly so called, it seems it was at 1645, just then beginning and used by very few. It must have begun in the disorderly times after 41. They (the assembly of divines in Westminster) reformed the font into a basin. This learned assembly could not remember that fonts to baptize in, had been always used by the primitive Christians, long before the beginning of popery, and ever since churches were built: but that sprinkling, for the common use of baptizing, was really introduced (in France first, and then in other popish countries) in times of popery. And that accordingly all those countries in which the usurped power of the pope is or has been formerly owned, have, left off dipping of children in the font; but that all other countries in the world, which had never regarded his authority do still use it, and that basins, except in cases of necessity, were never used by papists or any other Christians whatever, till by themselves. The way that is now ordinarily used we cannot deny to have been a novelty, brought into this church by those that had learned it in Germany, or at Geneva. And they were not content to follow the example of pouring a quantity of water, (which had there been introduced, instead of sprinkling) but improved it, if I may so abuse that word, from pouring to sprinkling, that it might have as little resemblance of the ancient way of baptizing as possible.” On this quotation Mr. Macalla remarked, “that this was only the opinion of Dr. Wall.” We replied, “that it was his conviction from the facts he had stated in his book, and because he could find nothing in antiquity to countenance sprinkling.” in infancy, and righteousness itself followed in mature age, so also, said he, in baptized infants the sacrament of regeneration, precedes, and if they hold fast Christian piety, conversion in the heart follows, the mystery whereof hath already been received in the body. In another place, speaking of infant baptism, he says, “the doctrine itself gives us no trouble, being long since established in the Christian church by the highest authority. Again: The question between them and us, is not whether infants are to be baptized, (for that infants should be baptized nobody doubts) and although they contradict us on the question which relates to its benefit, yet of this they entertain no doubt.”

In his famous controversy with the Pelagians, we have these remarks: “Doth Christ profit infants that are baptized, or doth he not? He must needs say, that he doeth profit; because he is pressed with the authority of the church our mother. If they say that Christ doeth not profit infants baptized, they, of necessity, affirm that infants are superfluously baptized, but this these very heretics dare not say, for they fly to this evasion, that they are not baptized for salvation, but for the kingdom of heaven.
Epist. 89. The baptism of infants is not superfluous, in order that by regeneration they may be freed from the condemnation received from Adam. Enchirid. c. 42:
From the new-born infant to decrepid old age, none are to be prohibited from baptism.”

He next adduces the decree of the Councils of Carthage and Miletus. Council of Carthage decrees, “Whosoever denies that infants are by the baptism of Christ freed from perdition, and made partakers of eternal life, let him be anathema.” Council of Miletus decrees, “The Catholic church every where diffused, always understood and asserted that this was an apostolic practice.” Fifth century.

Paulinus, of this age, cotemporary with Jerome and Augustine, says, “The priest brings the infant out of the font, white as snow, in body, in heart, and habit.”

Chrysostom, who died 407, says in a homily, “For this cause we baptize infants though they have no sin.” In another homily on Genesis, he says, It hath no determined time, but is lawful in childhood, middle life, and old age.” Ambrose, A.
D. 374, declares, “That the baptism of infants had been the practice of the apostles and of the church till that time.”

Gregory Nazianzen, in the middle of the fourth century, declares, “If thou hast an infant, let not iniquity get time, but let it be sanctified; let it be consecrated in the spirit; and whereas the heathens use charms and amulets to secure their children, do you bestow on them the Trinity, that great and good phylactery or preservative.”

“What shall we say concerning those that are yet children, and neither know the loss, nor are sensible of the grace of baptism? Shall we also baptize them?—Yes, by all means, if any danger press, they should be sanctified, when they have no sense of it, that they may not die unsealed and uninitiated.”

Cyprian and the sixty-six Bishops, A. D. 257, decree as follows,” As for the matter of infants, whom you said were not to be baptized within the second or third day of their nativity, it hath appeared to us in our council quite contrary; no one maintained your opinion, but we all judged, that the mercy and grace of God was to be denied to no man. But if any thing can hinder men from baptism, it will be heinous sins that will debar the adult and mature therefrom; and if those who have sinned extremely against God, yet afterwards believe and are baptized, and no man is prohibited from this grace; how much more ought not an infant to be prohibited, who being but just born, is guilty of no sin, but of original which he contracted in Adam? Wherefore, dearly beloved, it is our opinion, that from baptism none ought to be prohibited by us, which, as it is to be observed and followed with respect to all; so especially with respect to infants, and those that are but just born,”

We shall next introduce the celebrated Origen, who, in his homily on Luke xiv. says,” little ones are baptized for the remission of sins.” And again, in the same discourse, he has these words: “by the sacrament of baptism, the pollutions of our birth are put off, and therefore infants are baptized. —What reason can be given for the practice of baptizing infants, except this, that none is free from pollution—no, not if he be but a day old?” In his eighth sermon on Leviticus, we have these words: “Let it be inquired, since baptism is given for the remission of sins, why, according to the usage of the church, that baptism is given to infants. ” The last quotation I shall make, is the famous one in his Commentary on the Romans; it is this: “The church hath received a tradition from the apostles to give baptism to infants.”

Some Baptists have said that in Origen's genuine words there is no mention of baptism, and that his Latin works that do speak of it are full of interpolations, and in fact spurious. And that because he held the pre-existence of souls, and that some souls before their coming into the world were united to the body and had been taught of God, (Rob. p. 223.) therefore his testimony ought not to be received. It is enough to observe, that the Latin works of Origen are received as genuine by the whole learned world; if we except a few Baptist writers such as Gale, Boothe, and some others.

Tertullian's testimony must now be heard, as he is represented by Mr. Campbell as opposing infant baptism. He thus speaks, “Jesus Christ says, indeed, hinder not little children from coming to me; but that they should come to him as soon as they are advanced in years, as soon as they have learned their religion, when they may be taught whither they are going, when they are become Christians, when they begin to be able to know Jesus Christ. What is there that should compel this innocent age to receive baptism? And since they are not yet allowed the disposal of temporal goods, is it reasonable that they should be entrusted with the concerns of heaven? For the same reason, it is proper to make those who are not married wait for some time, by reason of the temptations they have to undergo, till they are married, or have attained to the gift of continency. Those who shall duly consider the great weight and moment of this divine sacrament, will rather be afraid of making too much haste to receive it, than to defer it for some time, that they may be the better capable of receiving it more worthily. What necessity is there to expose God-fathers to the hazard of answering for those whom they hold at the fonts, since they may be prevented by death from performing those promises which they have made for their children?”

We admit that Tertullian opposes infant baptism, but he opposes the baptism of unmarried persons from the same erroneous views. —He opposes it from his own whim.

Irenaeus, who died before the end of the second century, says, “Christ came to save all persons by himself; all, I mean, who are regenerated unto God, infants and little ones, and children, and youths, and elder persons.” The word regenerated, in this age, denoted baptized. Indeed, Irenaeus uses this word for baptism in many places, so Gregory Nazianzen says of baptism, “There is not another regeneration to be had, though it be sought with ever so much crying and tears.” Irenaeus is said to have been the disciple of Polycarp, and Polycarp was the disciple of John.

In the last place, I will give the words of Justin Martyr; I will read also from the debate in Mount Pleasant, p. 103.

“Several persons among us of sixty or seventy years old, and of both sexes, who were discipled to Christ in their childhood do continue uncorrupted.” Now as Justin flourished A. D. 140, sixty or seventy years from his time brings us back into the middle of the apostolic age; consequently those children were baptized in the apostolic age. Thus we have traced infant baptism back to the age of the apostles.

The heretics, as well as orthodox of the fourth and fifth centuries, are equally agreed and express on this subject. Even Pelagius and Celestius concur with the orthodox in this point. The late Mr. Campbell has these cogent remarks upon their testimony—pp. 113, 114. “A short abstract of the evidence in favour of infant baptism, which is accessible at this period, is all the limits assigned this work allows me to introduce. Yet what can be more interesting than the testimony of five of the greatest men of that age, Chrysostom, Augustine, and Jerome on one side of a great controversy; Pelagius and Celestius on the other; the former asserting it to be the general usage of the church originally delivered to it, and ever since practised; the latter promptly and cordially confessing the fact: one of them (and he a heretic) saying “Nunquam se vel impium aliquem haereticum audisse—'That he had never heard of any, not even the most impious sectary,' who ventured to deny it; the ether, that it was performed according to the rule of the church universal, and the decisive law of the gospel. At any rate, the evidence is quite sufficient to enable the candid inquirer to appreciate the historical accuracy of Robinson, when he asserts that it is impossible to say how infant baptism found its way into the Catholic church, and that there can be no hazard in affirming it was near the close of the fourth century that it was first brought into public by Gregory Nazianzen!
From the testimonies just reviewed, as well as from that which has been previously recited, it is as satisfactorily proved as any ancient fact need be, that infant baptism was publicly known and commonly practised from the very times of the apostles to those of Augustine and Jerome. What fact of Christian antiquity, I ask, reaches us recommended with stronger, or more variegated evidence, than this very one? The concessions of Celestius and Pelagius are immensely weighty, not only from the circumstance of their being heresiarchs, but from their being men of talents, learning, and large acquaintance with almost the whole religious world. Celestius was an Irishman, and Pelagius a South Briton: and besides possessing ample genius and splendid acquirements, they both had been diligent and extensive travelers, having traversed Europe, Asia, and Africa, and having made long and improving visits to most of the principal cities of the three continents. Yet these men, thus accomplished, thus traveled, thus extensively conversant with the far greater part of the Christian church, whether orthodox or the reverse, and having access to all the various sources of information open to inquiry in those times, declare, without hesitation, that the baptism of infants was the universal usage of the church and the law of Christ, and that scarce a heretic could be found wicked enough to deny baptism to infants. Who, then, can hesitate a moment to give entire credit to testimony, which, while it reaches us in a form so well authenticated, states that the most grossly heretical of such as received the Scriptures at all, or could in any sense be deemed Christians, did all of them admit the propriety of baptizing infants? Thus we leave infant baptism in the hands of the apostles.

That infant baptism is of great antiquity, while infant sprinkling is of modern origin, we cheerfully admit. We have no objection to admit that infant baptism is fifteen hundred years old, or perhaps a few years older; though it was not a general practice for centuries later. But infant communion is quite as ancient, and as rational too. Yes; and many of those fathers, of whom you have heard, are produced by the Catholics in proof of the antiquity of the doctrine of purgatory, and as evidences of its being a tradition.
of the apostles. Yes; and as evidences of the antiquity of praying to saints and angels. Although the bold assertions and vaunting pretensions of some advocates of human tradition would lead you to suppose that they had explicit documents to adduce, showing that this was the universal practice up to the time of the apostles, the fact is, that no man mentions infant baptism before Tertullian's time, in the third century. Yes; of forty-four writers, called orthodox, besides a great many called heterodox, who lived, and taught, and wrote, from the apostle John's time till the time of Tertullian, NOT ONE mentions infant baptism. But all that speak of baptism and of the baptized, speak of it and them, as the Baptists now speak, viz. that a disciple is the subject, and immersion the action. Mr. Maccalla has quoted two of these forty-four,—Irenaeus and Justin; and has endeavoured by a forced interpretation of their words to make them speak in favour of the tradition. But we shall soon see that it is a violence offered to their language; and that one of them, by his own words, most expressly forbids the interpretation. Is it not a most daring and unparalleled effort to attempt to prove that infant baptism is a Christian institute, when, for more than two hundred years from the Christian era, no man, orthodox or heterodox, even so much as mentioned the thing! Is it probable, nay, did ever the like happen, that any practice should be a common, a general, or even an occasional thing; and no man, friend or foe, of hundreds of writers, of teachers, of practisers, for more than two hundred years, drop one syllable about it!! I We have searched all the large and voluminous histories now extant, and many, if not all the abbreviated ones; we have examined all the writings of those called the apostles' successors, and many of the writings of their successors, both orthodox and heterodox, and fearlessly affirm that there lives not the man who can produce one instance to disprove our affirmation.

I wish it to be noted, that Mr. Maccalla has quoted the most of his Pedobaptist authorities from my debate in Ohio, and acknowledged that in every instance they are correctly given in that volume. We shall then present you our remarks on Irenaeus' words, that you may see how my opponent has, when he read his testimony, neglected to notice my remarks upon it. p. 104. “Christ came to save all persons by himself; all, I say, who are regenerated unto God,—infants, and little ones, and children, and youths, and elder persons.” Does this prove that Irenaeus speaks of infant baptism in his time? Where is it in his testimony? O! say the Pedobaptists, John P. Campbell and Mr. Walker, “regenerated unto God” meant baptized, and as infants are said to have been regenerated, it means that they were baptized. Irenaeus never used the word baptized at all! He substituted regeneration for baptism. Let us then do, as my opponent by his quotation says we should do, viz.
substitute baptism instead of regeneration, and then the testimony of Irenaeus thus reads—“ Christ came to save all persons by himself: all, I say, who are baptized,—infants, little ones, children, youths, and elder persons.” The testimony of Irenaeus then, as his commentators make it, is no way honourable to his sentiments as a Christian. Will my opponent say that all baptized persons are saved—infants, &c. then is infant baptism worth contending for!*

The words of Justin, which show the injustice of the attempt made by Mr.
Maccalla to make him speak in favour of infant baptism is given in the same book, p.
265. “Justin Martyr, second Apol. Ant. Pius, Emperor—“ I will declare unto you how we offer up ourselves to God, after that we are received through Christ: Those among us instructed in the faith, are brought to the water, then they are baptized therein, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Then we bring the person thus baptized or washed to the brethren, where the assemblies are, that we may pray both for ourselves, and the newly illuminated person; that we may be found by doctrine and good works, worthy observers and keepers of the commandments. Then bread and wine being brought to the chief brother, he taketh it and offereth praise and thanksgiving to the Father, in the name of the Son and the Holy Ghost. After prayer and thanksgiving the whole assembly saith Amen. When thanks-

* That the ancients sometimes used the word regenerate for baptize, I admit; but this was far from being common or general. For Tertullian, Origen, and indeed all “the fathers” used the word baptize as we do. When it does signify baptize in the idiom, the circumstances appended make it evident. And to substitute the word baptize, as I have done above, shews when it is not used for baptism, as in the words of Irenaeus. —A. C.
giving is ended by the chief guide and the consent of the whole people, the deacons (as we call them) give to every one present, part of the bread and wine, over which thanks is given; this we call the Eucharist, to which no man is admitted but he that believeth the truth of the doctrine, and lives as Christ has taught.”—Observe, he declares they are brought to the water, and not the water to them. They are first instructed in the faith. The baptized is called the newly illuminated person. The person is then placed at the Lord's table. This looks like an infant subject, and a “sprinkling mode!”

Tertullian, we have always said, has the honour of first mentioning infant baptism. But you have heard that he opposed it. It is alleged he was whimsical. J. P. Campbell and other Pedobaptists have pleaded this as an extenuation of his crime, and as a reason why he ought to be disregarded. I have said they were all full of whimsies. Irenaeus, Justin, Tertullian, Origen, Jerome, and Augustine held and taught wild and extravagant opinions. Some of these contended that Paul's epistle to Sineca, and Sineca's epistle to Paul were genuine. Some of them quoted the Sheppard of Hermas as a part of the holy scripture, Du Pin, Vol. i. pp. 47, 49. Some of them taught that some part of scripture had no literal meaning at all; that they were mystical. Some of them approbate the anointing with oil the baptized catechumens, the celebration of Good Friday, Easter, Whit-Suntide, auricular confession, and the fundamental dogmas of popery. Indeed, all those writers mentioned by Mr. Maccalla are enumerated by the Romanists as defenders of their faith; and are quoted by them as authorities on such points, as, the succession of popes, the different grades of the clergy, the doctrine of penances, transubstantiation, lent, and religious festivals, &c. Now if the Pedobaptists rebut the testimony of Tertullian, the first writer who mentions infant baptism, by alleging his other errors; and Robinson because he was a Socinian; then, on their own principles, we reject every ancient writer they adduce in this controversy; for they were to a man, erroneous and whimsical to an extreme, in the estimation of all protestant Pedobaptists.

Mr. Maccalla has told you that none but Baptists reject the Latin works of Origen as interpolated. His friend Mr. J. Campbell has said so too. Now as an evidence of these gentlemen's accuracy, hear Du Pin, Vol. i. p. 108. —“Those Latin works we have, are translated by Rufinus and others with so much liberty, that it is a difficult matter to discern what is Origen's own, from what has been foisted in by interpreters.

We care not, however, if Origen had mentioned infant baptism in every line in all his Greek and Latin works. He was the pattern of error. He was well called Origen, for he originated more errors than any man named in history. Even the catholics are ashamed of his notions, on many points, and say, “that all his errors arose from his efforts to accommodate the truths of the Christian religion to the Platonic principles.”

Tertullian remonstrates against infant baptism, as exposing God-fathers to a risk; and speaks as one who would address some weak minded being, who would predicate his plea on these words of Christ's, “suffer little children to come unto me,” he goes on to tell them when they ought to come, and reasons as one opposing an innovation arising from superstition.

And as to the testimony of these fathers, what is it? They testify, (some of them only) that the usage of the church was to give baptism to infants—that they knew no one that denied it—that they had a tradition from the apostles to baptize. —Such things were said in the third, fourth, or fifth centuries. Some honest men now say, that infant baptism has come from Jewish proselyte baptism— that it came too in the room of circumcision—that the apostles baptized infants—that there were infants in the households baptized. That the Baptists are a modern set of errorists—formerly a wild, fanatical, revolutionizing, feverish sect of mortals, and that they are not much better yet. That before the Munster insurrection there were no such people in the world, but, like Jonah's gourd, they sprang up in one night. Now all these things are testified by many as wise, as honest, and as faithful, as the fathers. But what does their testimony prove? Just as much as that of the famous Pelagius and Celestius; who at one time were accused of having denied baptism to infants, and at another time recant it, and, for fear of the orthodox, say, they never heard of any one denying it. The late Mr. Campbell has represented these heretics as very learned, and as very far traveled, as knowing every thing almost about Christianity in Europe, Asia, and Africa. —Yet “they knew of no one that denied baptism to infants.” Now this same Mr. Campbell and Mr. Walker, who never visited Europe, Asia, or Africa, and who lived in the 19th century, have heard, as Mr. Campbell says, p. 114. of the Vallentinians, Quintillianists, Messalians, and the followers of Manes, who “opposed the baptizing of infants.” Of what use then was the testimony of Pelagius and Celestius, the great learning, fine talents, and long journeys, when those gentlemen, born in the valleys of the Mississippi, have heard of four sects of errorists, before the time of Pelagius, who denied baptism to infants.

Mr. Maccalla has told us nothing of the catechumens, the children of believers, of whom so much is said in history. These were so numerous that ecclesiastical canons were passed concerning their education and baptism. The church appointed teachers to instruct the children of the members, to qualify them for baptism. Easter and Whitsuntide were the great “baptizing seasons” for those children of believers that had been catechised and prepared for baptism. Now the question is, if infant baptism was common in those days, the third, fourth, and fifth centuries, why were the children of the members of the church suffered to grow up without baptism? No Pedobaptist ever notices this historical fact in the dispute about baptism: and another fact, equally express, when infant baptism became general, the whole catechumen system vanished. From these two facts we argue, that the existence of such classes in the ancient churches until such baptism became general, and then the total disappearance of such classes, when infant baptism became general, is an historic monument expressive of a third fact; that infant baptism was gradually introduced, as men’s minds became more dark, and as Christianity was corrupted with pagan ceremonies. We rejoice that the boards which enclose the New Testament circumscribe our faith and practice as Christians; and that we are not left to wander in the reveries of paganized Christians, or christianized pagans; but are expressly commanded “not to add unto his words, lest he reprove us, and we be found liars.”

As we have nearly run this race, I will take the liberty of promulgating what has been called my general challenge, Under the following circumstances:
I trust it is satisfactorily proved to yon all, that this controversy did not originate with me. But now that it has commenced, and been continued, I conceive it to be my duty to give every opportunity for the fullest discussion. I have met Mr. Walker and Mr. Maccalla in public debate, and, certainly, I must be very dull of apprehension, if I should not now he convinced, that the latter gentleman has fallen as far short of having proved the ground which he assumed, as did the former. I should consider it then very indecorous, and contrary to correct principle to retire from this discussion under the triumphant banner of truth, without affording another opportunity to some distinguished ecclesiastic, of still further contesting the subject. But as I have learned something from experience, having been unreasonably detained in the proof of the positions which I defend, and having seen, in the eccentricity of the course of my opponent, the bad effects of the want of a controlling system of rules, I wish to have it distinctly understood, that whosoever may agree to debate this question, or any other with me, must submit to be governed by a system of rules adopted by three moderators, chosen as the present have been. And to prevent the intrusion of any person, or of every person, who may conceive that he has either the information or ability requisite to such a discussion, from putting us to unnecessary trouble, it must be distinctly understood, that if he should be of the Presbyterian order, he must either be the President of some respectable college, or a person appointed by a presbytery or Synod to debate the points at issue. If, of the Episcopalian order, he must be appointed either by a convention of that order, or he must be a bishop, rector, or some other dignitary, according to the popular calendar. With any such gentleman of good moral character, I engage again to prove, viva voce, or in any other way agreed upon, that infant sprinkling is a human tradition, injurious to the well-being of society, religious and political.

To the preceding invitation, I now add a new one, viz. If any Pedobaptist clergyman think that he can prove that the Pedobaptist clergy are an order of men authorized of Heaven, I will engage to prove in a debate with him, either viva voce, or with the pen, that they are not; but that they are self-created, and injurious to the well-being of society, religious and political. I must have an equal vote in determining the time and place, and should such a discussion take place, it must be moderated as above specified. Luther and Calvin only questioned the divine authority of the pope. We think the whole Pedobaptist priesthood are as unauthorized of Heaven as his infallibility.

Mr. Macalla closed the day by alleging that there were different kinds of quotations, perverted quotations, quotations of construction; also different kinds of authorities, ancient and modern; different kinds of writers, didactic, controversial, practical, &c. And after a brief disquisition upon these distinctions, he concluded by libeling the Baptist writers, historians, and others: he divided them into eleven classes: 1st. the irrelevant; 2nd. dissemblers; 3rd. recanters; 4th. dogmatists; 5th. the ambiguous; 6th. the incapable; 7th. the credulous; 8th. the unfair; 9th. heretics; 10th. liars; 11th. the anomalous. After having closed this chapter of reproaches and slanders, he next introduced the Transylvania University, Dr. Holly its president, and represented it as under the influence of infidel principles and Socinian morality. After having gone through these items in a most masterly manner, in doing which he seemed quite at home, he closed by requesting the indulgence of the moderators another day, promising to ask their attendance but one day more.

Seventh day, met according to adjournment.

Mr. Campbell observed.—Mr. Maccalla had afforded a more striking instance of the persecuting spirit of Pedobaptism in his address yesterday evening, than any instances he had specified while illustrating that topic. Mr. Maccalla had himself fully proved the truth of all that Mr. Campbell had alleged. Like the Romanists, Mr. Maccalla had dug up the bones of the martyrs and burned them. Mr. Campbell then explained the reasons of Mr. Maccalla's antipathy against the Transylvania University and Dr. Holly, viz. because it had under the maladministration of the Presbyterians languished into an inferior sort of grammar school, and after being taken out of their hands, by the legislature of the State, and put under new regulations, and under the presidency of Dr. Holly, it had risen to a very high degree of celebrity, and by an extraordinary accession of students, it had, in a short time, rivalled the most ancient, and transcended in fame, many of the most respectable literary institutions in the Union. That now the Presbyterian clergy, mortified, piqued, chagrined, were using all their energies to blast its reputation, and to regain its control. In the true character of that spirit which is

To blot the brightest worth, and blast the fairest name,”

they were pushing their schemes to the utmost. Mr. Campbell concluded by observing, in reference to the slanders pronounced by Mr. Maccalla on the living and dead who had dared to oppose infant baptism; not even those of his own denomination, (such as the learned and candid Campbell and MacKnight, who had made concessions subversive of infant sprinkling,) were exempted from his invectives. It afforded us some consolation, that his testimony, as to things of this nature, was harmless, inasmuch as it was reported that he had lately been convicted by the laws of his own state, and by a jury of his own county, of having libeled a neighbouring preacher.*

Mr. Campbell then moved, that their correspondence should be read; that as Mr. Maccalla had requested to have it read on the first day of the discussion, and the moderators not having then paid any attention to his motion, probably, because Mr. Campbell then said nothing for or against it; that now, seeing Mr. Campbell also had requested it, perhaps they would, on their joint request allow it to be read.

[Mr. Maccalla opposed the reading of the correspondence, alleging that he wished to appropriate the day for other purposes. The president of the bench said, that if Mr. Campbell wished to read any part of it as evidence, it might be brought forward by him as such, but as Mr. Maccalla did not wish now to appropriate his time in this way, they did not wish to order it to be read. ]

Mr. MACCALLA again affirmed that the Transylvania University was under the superintendance of one that denied all baptisms, and that it was upon the eve of destruction under Socinian morality, and in consequence of the state of its funds, was in worse circumstances than when under the management of the Presbyterians: under some of them, he admitted that it languished, but under others of them it nourished even more than since Dr. Holly presided over it. That his opponent had now proved himself to be a Socinian by advocating the cause of Dr. Holly; and that father Ralston had proved him guilty of falsehoods, when endeavouring to prove that he had misrepresented him. That Mr. Campbell had affirmed in his Strictures that the Baptist church descended from the first church in Jerusalem, but that no evidence can be produced in proof of it. That the Baptists have to depend upon the Waldenses to help them out of total obscurity for many ages, but that they would not help them out of their difficulties. That he had proved, and could still farther prove, that they were descended from the Mennonites of Holland, and that the Mennonites had descended from the Anabaptists at Munster. Then reads from Milner, how Munzer took advantages of the enthusiasm of the times, of the political wars, and of the horrid deeds of the furious madmen of Munster. Then draws a comparison between the leader of the madmen of Munster and his present opponent, and concludes by a description of a terrible engagement amongst baggage wagons, and of the tremendous consequences of discharges of cannon balls, grape shot, and musketry, &c.

Mr. Campbell replied,—

That he knew of no bearing these topics had upon the subject of their discussion; that his opponent had doubtless departed from all rule and precedent; and that Mr. Maccalla seemed to degrade both himself and the cause which he had espoused. That he did not come hither to defend Dr. Holly and the Transylvania University from the aspersions of Mr. Maccalla. That he was sorry to see such a spirit of persecution and proscription manifesting itself. That because he had stated the well known cause of the opposition of Mr. Maccalla to that university and its principal, which with all that he has said of its former splendour, was scarcely heard of, out of its own state, until the change before mentioned; that to infer from hence that he, Mr.
Campbell, was a Socinian, was paying a handsome compliment to his own intellect, and to the common civilities among men. That he knew not what Dr. Holly's religious sentiments were, but that he did know from his own experience, that little or no faith was to be put in the charges brought by the clergy against the man whom they envy. All men who are likely to be useful in any way, not compatible with their honour, or in opposition to their views, are either liars, Socinians, or some infamous heretics. Might not I, said Mr. Campbell, have charged Mr. Maccalla with Pelagianism, or Sabellianism, or any obnoxious ism, for having quoted Pelagius, and other heretics, and Catholics, in proof of infant baptism! On the very principle on which he deals condemnation to others, he is himself condemned as an heretic. Robinson and Dr. Holly, were they as great heretics as Mr. Maccalla represents them, are very far from being such errorists as Dr. Origen or saint Augustine. But what has this to do with our controversy?*

* “In the mean time I observed,” says Mr. Campbell, “that it then occurred to my mind, that one objection usually brought by the Peso-baptists against the Baptists, had not been brought forward by Mr. Maccalla, and that as great stress had been laid upon it by Mason, Ralston, Walker, Armstrong, and others, I would advert to it instead of those cannon balls and grape shot mentioned by Mr. Maccalla. The objection is this, that we have no express command nor precedent for admitting a woman to the Lord's table: and therefore, while we admit such to that ordinance, without such express authority, we ought to admit infants to baptism without either an express command, or an express precedent. This objection, I think, I fully removed in my Strictures on Mr. Ralston. But as, upon a close examination of the Scriptures, I have found that there is an express command, and an express precedent, that we presume to be as completely unobjectionable as any proposition can be, I will submit them. Here I read the 11th chapter of the 1st Epistle to the Corinthians, where the word aner, man, occurs fourteen times in the first seventeen verses; and the word gune, woman, occurs sixteen times in the same number. After speaking of the man and the woman, as both members of the church, and after having pointed out their peculiar duties in some respects, the apostle uses the word tit, v. 16, of both genders, referring to both aner and gune; and then uses the pronouns ye and you addressing both genders. As the pronoun stands for the noun, so you represents both man and woman, its antecedents. ’As often,’ says the apostle, ’as ye, ’who? doubtless the antecedent; for the pronoun stands for the noun, as all grammarians teach—As often as ye, men and women, of whom I have been speaking, eat this bread, and drink this cup (in the margin) 'shew ye [men and women] forth the Lord’s

He reads from different works of the monstrous misdeeds of the German Anabaptists. Some of them he assures us were robbers of hen-houses. Some of them had from three to a dozen wives. One orthodox Anabaptist cut the heads off three or perhaps thirteen of his wives, and danced at their exit. These elegant episodes Mr. Maccalla enchantingly embellished with some most pious strains of sympathy and condolence. He earnestly hoped that the modern Anabaptists were somewhat reformed, and thought he knew a few Baptists, (for he had a few relations amongst that people,) who were really reformed, and had renounced those licentious and enthusiastic principles of the founders of their sect. But that any man would say, that the Baptists descended from the apostolic churches to the present time, argued no ordinary temerity. He did wish dead till he come. ’ Here, then, is a positive command, ’men and women show forth the Lord's death till he come. ’ The only question, that can be here, is about the meaning of the pronoun. And if it be called an interference, to say that 'the pronoun stands for the noun,' or to substitute the word for which another one stands, then there is nothing express in language. I hope we shall hear nothing of inference in this case, for no man of common sense, to say nothing of common erudition, will, I presume insult his own intellect by saying, that to substitute the noun for the pronoun, is an inference. The thing is done, a positive command for men and women to shew forth the Lord's death, has been produced. Let Mr. Maccalla object if ha can.

“Now for the express precedent. It is in Acts ii. 42, 'And they continued steadfastly in fellowship, and in breaking bread.' We are expressly told that the they, whoever they were, continued steadfastly 'in breaking the loaf.' The only question here is, for what noun does the pronoun stand? Let us review the context; chap. i. 14. — 'These all continued in prayer and supplication, with the women, and Mary the mother of Jesus,’ &c. The number of the whole was about one hundred and twenty. Chap. ii. I. 'On the day of Pentecost they (the one hundred and twenty) were all with one accord in one place, (read the chapter) after Peter's sermon, three thousand were added unto them (the one hundred and twenty). The they, the men and women, even they, the three thousand one hundred and twenty, continued steadfastly in breaking the loaf. Here again, the pronoun they has the nouns men and women for its antecedent; and as it stands for the nouns in the plural number, we shall read the nouns in its stead. 'And the three thousand one hundred and twenty, men and women, continued in breaking the loaf.’” Here again is express precedent. I trust if any objection can be made, we shall now hear it, or never after hear that miserable excuse for infant sprinkling.”
to know who had the right to administer baptism regularly derived from John the Baptist; and if the Baptists could trace the ordination of their ministers by regular descent from Paul, or Peter, or any of the apostles. But, said he, let us see how Mr. Campbell writes their history. He says the church at Jerusalem was a Baptist church; for none were admitted into it but such as gladly received the word. The church at Samaria was a Baptist church, because many of the Samaritans believed and were baptized. And so of some others; but who succeeded them? who kept this adult baptism uncorrupted!! Behold, in the days of Constantino, infant baptism, he has said, or signified so much, contributes to the establishment of Christianity, as a state religion. And where are the Baptist churches for the long lapse of seven hundred years? where is the history that gives an account of them? All silent! all dead! no recording-pen hands down their names, their churches, or their clergy!—‘Tis all a blank. —History is searched in vain. —The Baptists are a modern sect; and those writers who would trace their origin further back than the era of the Anabaptists, are not entitled to credit; and lying writers have appeared.

That if Mr. Maccalla would enter into the discussion, he would engage to shew that baptism, as viewed and practised by the Baptists, had its advocates in every century up to the Christian era. That communities of Christians practised it in every age since its institution. That the first forty-four writers after the apostles, now called orthodox, never once mentioned any other baptism than that for which we contend. That all the writers of the first and second centuries, inspired and uninspired, speak of a believer as the only subject, and of immersion as the only baptism. In the third century infant baptism was introduced, but only in certain cases; that Jerome, Athanasius, Epiphanius, the Council of Laodicea, of Niocessaria, in the fourth century; Chrysostom, Faustus, Regiensis, and Evagrius, in the fifth; Gregory and the Council of Agatha in the sixth; the Bracaren's Council, and that of Toletanus, Paulinus, and his associates in England, in the seventh; Bede, Haime, the Council of Paris, and that of Laodicea, in the eighth; Rabanus and Albinus in the ninth; Smaragdo in the tenth; Anslem, the Waldenses and Albigenses, Peter de Brus and his numerous associates, in the eleventh; Albertus Magnus, Thomas Aquinas, in the twelfth; Jacob Merningus records that many in Poland, Lombardy, Germany, and Holland, in the thirteenth; Carius, bishop of Meyland, the Thaborites, and many Bohemians, in the fourteenth; the Hungarians and Waldenses in their confession of faith, A. D. 1521, and hosts in the sixteenth century have advocated the Baptists' sentiments and practice. And we might more reasonably tell of the bloody deeds of the Catholics, Calvinists, Lutherans, &c. and impute them to their followers, than Mr. Maccalla to tell us of the German Anabaptists, whom we disclaim; and independent of whose existence, clouds of witnesses attest the fact, that before the Reformation from popery, and from the apostolic age to the present time, the sentiments of Baptists, and the practice of baptism, have had a continued chain of advocates, and public monuments of their existence in every century can be produced. See Strictures on Ralston, pp. 260—272. Even the greatest enemy among ecclesiastical historians, Dr. Mosheim, is constrained to say, Vol. iv. p. 424, “The TRUE ORIGIN of that sect which ACQUIRED the denomination of Anabaptists, by their administering anew the rite of baptism, to those that came to their communion, and derived the name of Mennonists from the famous man to whom they owe the greatest part of their present felicity, is HID in the remote depths of antiquity, and is of consequence difficult to be ascertained.”

He affirms that all the evils which have been ascribed to infant baptism can be ascribed to the Baptist system. That nearly all the good in Christendom is attributable to the Pedobaptists; that the mode of baptism, popular among the Baptists, was really injurious to society. He demands how can sprinkling be injurious to society? Descants upon the delicacy of the subjects of baptism in many instances; upon John Floyer's views of cold bathing; mentions a friend that had got the ague by being baptized; a woman in North Carolina died in the act of baptism; tells of two men who were immersed in Woodford County, Kentucky, one was drowned, and the baptizer was told by the other, when solicited to come forward, that he preferred going to heaven by land to a journey by water.* That a Baptist had been tried for murder in one case, and that as a physician in the state of Ohio had been liable to a prosecution for having taken the life of his patient; so he thought it ought to be in relation to the Baptists when any damage was sustained by the subject; he would not, he said, recommend prosecution, but he thought that the administrator ought to be accountable when injury was done. —He adds that it was a fact that Baptists had been persecutors in Germany, and that it was unreasonable to say that infant baptism inspired a persecuting spirit; that Baptists never had it in their power to enact laws, and therefore could not be persecutors for the want of power. He again resumes the dangers and indelicacies of immersion, and shews that it is pernicious, not only to the subjects, but also to the administrators. That the administrators were exposed to sickness, and that it must unavoidably be injurious to them to be plunging into the water all seasons, and continuing in it so long as they often did; and that miraculous escapes were not to be expected.

Mr. Campbell replied: —

That Benjamin Franklin, when minister in Paris, dined with a number of French and American gentlemen. A learned French Abbe at dinner entertained the company with a very learned disquisition on the deteriorating influence of the American climate on the bodies of all animals. That the human body diminished in size and energy, and that even the mind itself shared in the general deterioration.

* As a sample of the method in which Mr. Maccalla and others pick up documents to oppose this institution, and as an evidence of how much regard is due to such calumnies, I will relate a circumstance well authenticated to me. During the discussion at Washington, Mr. Maccalla spent an evening with a gentleman in the vicinity of Washington, whose son had lived in Woodford county, Kentucky. The young man, on the evening alluded to, finding his father somewhat indisposed, and low spirited, for the sake of imparting a little cheerfulness, and of gratifying Mr. Maccalla and his friends, relates the above tale provided for the occasion. It had the desired effect; it was well relished by Mr. Maccalla, and when the occasion demanded, it was produced as a true fact, and as a sound argument against immersion. —A. C.
Dr. Franklin made no reply; but after dinner told the company with what pleasure he had heard the learned disquisitions of the philosopher: he moved that the company be divided, observing, that the fairest way of testing the correctness of the learned Abbe's theory, was to place all the Americans on one side of the room, and the French on the other. The motion was carried; and behold a company of little, swarthy, insignificant Frenchmen on the one side, and a row of little giants on the other. Aye, says the Dr. see here is a striking proof of the correctness of your theory! Now let us take the philosopher's way of testing the correctness of the theory of my opponent. There sits on the bench a Baptist and a Pedobaptist teacher, both well advanced in years; the former has, we are told, immersed more persons than any other person of the same age in the State, or perhaps in the United States; the other, from his venerable age, may be supposed to have sprinkled a great many infants. Now see the pernicious tendency of immersion on the Baptist, and the happy influence of sprinkling on the Pedobaptist.*

Evidences of the tendency of the Baptist views of the church to civil liberty; a reference to the constitution and laws of Rhode Island, a state founded and settled by Baptists; ancient and modern proofs of the pacific, benevolent, and humane dispositions of the Baptists were adduced. That while Mr. Maccalla endeavoured to accuse the Baptists with the deeds of German fanatics, which the Baptists ever disclaimed, they had good ground to assert the persecuting tendency of Pedobaptism, by reference to the history and biography of those whom they claimed as the founders of their sect. Read sundry extracts in proof, one from Strictures on Ralston, p. 260. Of the persecutions of the Quakers and Baptists in New England and Virginia, under the reign of Pedobaptism. Of the fining and imprisoning of nonconformists in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Massachusetts—that is, of the proceedings of those little confederations called moral associations, for fining traveling tea-masters for not

* Bishop Verdeman exhibits the finest appearance, tall and well-proportioned, weighing 300 lbs. of a remarkably florid and healthy aspect, possessing uncommon energies of constitution, and though on the borders of fifty, says he feels no abatement of his constitutional rigour. The Rev. Mr. Birch is rather below mediocrity in his person, and his countenance does not indicate the most healthy constitution, reverencing the institutes of the clergy, &c. Gave a brief address on the nature, design, and import of the Sabbath, and of the first day, to obviate misapprehensions; and concluded by remarking that Mr. Maccalla had indicated, not only during the preceding discussion at sundry times, but in his last address, the same spirit of proscription, by alleging that Baptist ministers should be held responsible for any injuries that might be imputed to their administering immersion.

Mr. Maccalla proceeds by observing that other instances of drowning could be adduced besides those mentioned, and affirms that immersion is dangerous to the lives of the subjects and administrators. He complains that the Baptist principles not only unchurch myriads of Christians, but actually destroy the idea of a regular Pedobaptist ministry; that Pedobaptist societies were not churches, nor their pastors ministers of Christ. He then calls for evidence that the Baptist churches and ministers have descended by regular succession from the church at Jerusalem, and that their baptism is administered by persons deriving their right by uninterrupted succession from John the Baptist or from the apostles. He then commences his recapitulation which, we will present in due form.

My friends, said Mr. Maccalla, in rebutting the charges brought against us by my opponent, I took the following ground, and pursued the following method: In the first place,

I. I proposed to adduce a divine command for infant baptism.
II. To produce probable evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.
III. To exhibit positive evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism.

In accomplishing the first object, I submitted the five following positions:
1. That Abraham and his seed were divinely constituted a true, visible church of God.
2. That the Jewish society before Christ, and the Christian society after Christ, are one and the same church in different dispensations.
3. That Jewish circumcision before Christ, and Christian baptism after Christ, are one and the same seal, though in different forms.
4. That the administration of this seal to infants was once enjoined by divine authority.

5. That the administration of this seal to infants was never prohibited by divine authority.

In proving the first position, I demonstrated that there were certain things essential to a church state, and that Abraham and his seed possessed them. These are, 1st. the oracles of a church; 2nd. the ordinances of a church; 3rd. the officers of a church; 4th. the members of a church; 5th. the worship and discipline of a church; and 6th. the inspired name church.

In proving the second position, I shewed the nature of identity in general, and of ecclesiastical identity in particular, and that the two societies had the three grand items essential to ecclesiastical identity, viz: —

1. They had the same religion,
2. They had the same inspired names,
3. They had the same immutable covenant.

In proving the third position, I shewed that circumcision and baptism were both initiatory rites, by which the subjects were owned and acknowledged as belonging to the church; 2nd. that they were both seals of the righteousness of faith; 3rd. that they were both emblematical of sanctification.

In proving the 4th position, it was only necessary to shew that circumcision was positively commanded, Gen. xvii. and that it was the ground and reason acted upon in giving a commission to baptize.

In the proof of my 5th position, it was only necessary to call for a command prohibitory of the administration of this seal to infants; for being once recognized as having a right to the seal of this ecclesiastical covenant, that right must remain until withdrawn by the same authority, and no satisfactory evidence has been produced to shew that this right has been withdrawn, consequently infants are commanded to be baptized.

The second head of method was to afford probable evidence of apostolic practice of infant baptism. This we did by investigating Jewish proselyte baptism as practised at the Christian era, from which it appeared that it was highly probable, that Christ took up this ordinance as practised among the Jews, and appointed it by his authority for the same purpose; and that as the Jews baptized all the families of proselytes, so the apostles baptized all the families of those who believed.

In proving the third topic of my method, I shewed that oikos denoted children in its biblical import; and from a minute analysis of the text, and a close examination of the circumstances of the houses baptized, that there were certainly infants in them. Thus I gave you an express command and an express precedent for infant baptism.

In discussing the mode of baptism my method was,

1. To attend to the words used in relation to this rite,
2. To advert to the cases of baptism recorded,
3. To consider the spiritual allusions to this ordinance. Under the first item, I demonstrated that sprinkling or affusion was the import of the Greek word baptismos in religious ordinances, and that the preposition eis must he translated to, en, at, or near to, ek and apo, from, in this ordinance. Under the second item I demonstrated, from a reference to all the cases of baptism on record, that sprinkling, and not dipping, was the primitive practice.

Under the third and last item I proved, from a reference to the spiritual allusion of baptism, that pouring or sprinkling was the true and significant mode of administering this ordinance.

By a reference to ecclesiastical history I have proved, that infant baptism has been practised in every century from the present day up to the apostolic age. And that the Baptists are descended from the German Anabaptists; a turbulent set of fanatics in the sixteenth century. I have also, while engaged in proving these positions, shewn that infant baptism, so far from being injurious to society, is a blessing to it, and that immersion is a real injury to many. Upon a careful investigation of the whole course of this discussion, I think you will say that we stand acquitted from the charge of administering a factitious ordinance, injurious to the church and the world, and that my opponent has failed in a debate of seven days in proving any one of the positions he assumed. We therefore conclude, that infant baptism is a divine ordinance, of beneficial tendency, as respects the offspring of the faithful, and also indirectly a blessing to the world.
Mr. Campbell arose:—

Observing that no well authenticated fact could be adduced, showing that immersion had been a real injury to any; that it had been practised in every latitude with safety, from the frozen regions of Siberia, to the equator. That it was as reasonable, and as accordant with fact, to say, that sprinkling infants was the cause of spasms and convulsions, because these sometimes succeeded the ceremony of sprinkling, as that fever and ague, &c. were the effects of immersion, because the person immersed had sometime afterwards had such an attack. That Mr. Maccalla's demand for a regular succession in the ministry from the apostles till now, was merely a reiteration of the old popish cry against Protestants, which, by the bye, neither Catholics nor Protestants of any grade could produce. That there were breaches in the popish chain of succession, and in the Protestant chain, that all the spiritual artificers in Christendom could not repair. That Baptists had long ago discarded the idea, that there was a fountain of clerical grace or ministerial efficacy lodged in the person of St. Peter, to be communicated by the touch of his hand to his successor, and thus to be ramified into ten myriads of streams, every successor having in his elbows and wrists, individually, or in connexion with his co-presbyters, the full fountain of apostolic efficacy. That if such a fountain had been laid up in Peter, and had been transmitted to his successor, that since that time there had been so many leaky popes, prelates, and clergy, that every drop had oozed out, and that all the hands and joints in Christendom could not produce one genuine drop of the original fountain. That if Mr. Maccalla understood the nature and design of the Christian church, its bishops, and deacons, with the scriptural plan of their introduction to office, such a question would not have been proposed. But that upon the Presbyterian hypothesis, the Baptists were still in a better condition as to this peculiar power of office than the Presbyterians; for there were Baptists in all ages that never acknowledged the mother of harlots; and besides, Catholic, Episcopalian, and Presbyterian clergy had joined their community, and, therefore, whatever efficacy of office there was on earth, was to be found in the Baptist community. This I urged as an argumentum ad hominem.

But Mr. Maccalla has commenced a recapitulation. I must follow his example, or rather improve upon it. He has given you, my friends, an account of what he did; we shall attend to what he did, and to what he did not; and also recapitulate our own arguments.

In the first place, then, Mr. Macalla has proved by the method he has taken, that he was conscious in his own breast that he could not maintain his views of baptism in a fair discussion. My reason for so alleging is taken from the fact, that he wrote down at home all that he has advanced as argument in this discussion; and knowing that he had all that he could or would say in writing, he at the same time insisted that I should open the debate, whereas he was determined to keep to his notes, let me take what course I might. This, then, I conceive to be decisive evidence of his conscious incompetency. His marked-out course required, in the nature of things, that he should open and I respond; but he wished to have the place of the respondent, and at the same time to introduce the matter to be discussed. This was good policy, but bad logic.

His first position was not contested, because irrelevant, and because it would defeat his good intentions. We always admitted that the Jews when called out of Egypt, became a church, or a religious assembly in some sense. While he proved that they “were divinely constituted a true visible church of God,” he proved from his essentials of a church state, that they were not such an assembly, till called out of Egypt, and thus confuted himself, upon the assumption that the covenant with Abraham was an ecclesiastical covenant, and that circumcision was a seal of an ecclesiastical covenant.

The second position was contested, and it was shewn, that if he proved it, he thereby refuted himself; and if he did not make it good, he was, on his own principles, confuted. When he had dug this pit for himself, and found himself buried by his own efforts, he never made one effort, as you all know, to extricate himself. And, in the next place, when eleven substantial arguments, or evidences, were formally presented, as demonstrative that the Jewish and Christian societies were not one and the same church, he did not so much as attempt to reply to any of them save one, and that one in such a way as to evince that both it and the others were invincible. The facts on which these arguments were predicated are of a most convincing nature, and we shall again distinctly state them.

1. Daniel, during the existence of the Jewish kingdom foretold that in the days of the Caesars' a new kingdom would be constituted or set up.

2. The New Testament opens with the annunciation of the immediate approach and appearance of this new kingdom.

3. The Saviour declared that the law and the prophets were preached till John's time; but since that time the kingdom of heaven was announced, and men were pressing into it.

4. The terms of admission, or the way of entrance into this kingdom, was essentially different from the way of introduction into the Jewish. Natural birth introduced to the Jewish, supernatural into the Christian kingdom.

5. The Saviour declared that he would, in a future period, build his church upon a foundation on which it would be triumphant. This argues it was not then founded.

6. That the new kingdom was promised by Christ to be given to his disciples, and not to the Jewish nation.

7. That at the renovation, or setting up of this kingdom, the King promised thrones of judgment or legislature to his apostles, and gave them this privilege, to the exclusion of all former prophets or legislators.

8. The good confession of the King before Pontius Pilate, declared his kingdom to be of a character essentially new among men.

9. On the day of Pentecost the erection of this kingdom took place; and not one of the members of the Jewish church were admitted, until born of water and of the Spirit; until they professed repentance and faith.

10. The apostle declares, Eph. ii. 14, 16, that Jesus Christ made a new man, or a new ecclesiastical body, composed of Jews and Gentiles.

11. The apostle Paul positively declares that Jews and Christians were brought to two states essentially different. — Heb. xii. 18, 28.

Another evidence was adduced, but for a twofold purpose, and at another time.

It is well known to you all, my friends, that these arguments have never been attacked by my opponent, and that they are directly subversive of his whole theory.

His third position was disproved by a reference to the essential points of difference between circumcision and baptism, most of which he passed over in silence, and not one of which he removed. It was also shewn that he begged every question connected with his views of baptism. He took it for granted that baptism was a seal; and a seal of the same covenant to which circumcision was attached, without the formality of an attempt to prove it.

His fourth position we admitted, in so far as it alleged that circumcision was once enjoined upon infants; but we exposed the absurdity of calling a divine command for circumcision, a divine command for baptism.

His fifth position we effectually set aside by producing the great desideratum, a divine command for casting out the natural seed of believers from a participation with the children of promise; believers in Christ, Gal. iv. You will also remember, that in every instance when I invited Mr. Maccalla to the discussion of any particular portion of scripture, pledging myself to rest the whole controversy upon it, such as Acts xv. Rom, iv. Gal. iv. Col. ii. Gen. xvii. &c. he manfully declined, and resolutely refused to do so.

His probable evidence in favour of apostolic practice of infant baptism we showed to be subversive of his own practice altogether, and that it reduced the baptism of John and that of Christ to a Jewish tradition.

His positive evidence from oikos and oikia, and the households baptized, I think, upon examination, proved itself to be a conceit, and to fall infinitely short of even probable evidence.

His doctrine of the "mode of baptism," old and antiquated as it was, we minutely attended to, and I leave it with you to say, whether the rules of interpretation submitted by him, or me, were such as comport with reason, the nature of the case, and with the plain matters of fact recorded in the New Testament. You will also remember that he uniformly declined coming to any decisive criticisms, or standards, or rules of decision on that part of the subject.

As to his disquisitions upon ecclesiastical history, we conceived them altogether irrelevant to the points at issue: and it also appeared, we presume, to the satisfaction of the disinterested, that so far from receiving any additional countenance to his views from that source, it evidently appeared that infant baptism was not to be met with till the third century, in any record or history on earth. That Tertullian is the most ancient author that mentions the rite, and that he mentioned it as cue opposing an innovation.
As to his favourite point, the German Anabaptists, we have shown that his slanders from that source fall to the ground. We disclaimed that people in word and deed. But yet I would rather plead kindred with them, wild and fanatical as they were, than with the mother kirk, that crimsoned harlot, drunken with the blood of the saints; from which sprang the modern Pedobaptist sects; and if they plead reformation, so do we. It is however a boyish slander to say, for, in so saying, he reproaches himself. We have, however, proved that ages before those fanatics arose, there were bold asserters of our views; and peaceful, virtuous, devout communities of Christians walking in our practice.

Has run through scoundrels ever since the flood;”

Thus I have briefly shewn what Mr. Maccalla has done, and what he has not done. Now of your clemency hear me a few words when speaking of what I have done.

In the first place I took “my text” from Mr. Maccalla’s Confession of Faith, which saith “baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament ordained by Jesus Christ.” My rules of interpreting scripture were also taken from the same confession. I therefore opened the New Testament and read the law of baptism, and the practice of the apostles, in Judea, Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth. I called upon Mr. Maccalla to read from the same volume his authority for infant baptism, but he could find nothing to read, and withdrew to Robinson. My method was,

1. To shew that a believer was the only subject of baptism.
2. That immersion is the only baptism.
3. That infant sprinkling is injurious to the well being of society, religious and political.

1. In proof of the first position I demonstrated that the law of baptism authorizes the baptism of believers only, and, in fact, virtually forbids the baptism of any others.
2. That the apostles in the execution of their commission in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth, never baptized any other than a professed believer or a disciple.
3. That the nature and design of baptism is suited to believers only.
4. That the promises, connected with baptism, are addressed to believers only.
6. That the actions of the baptized at the time, and immediately subsequent to their baptism, mentioned in all the New Testament, were such as infants could not perform.

In the illustration and proof of my second position, I demonstrated,
1. That the Greek verbs and verbal nouns employed by the Founder of Christianity, to express the action he designed to have performed, were of precise and definite import, and that they naturally or literally denoted the act of immersion, and were so understood by all translators, critics, and lexicographers of candour and eminence.
2. That the prepositions used in construction with these terms necessarily required them to be translated literally to immerse, or dip.
3. That the doctrinal references to the action of baptism imply immersion, and represent the person as immersed.
4. That the places where this ordinance was administered, and the circumstances connected therewith, shew it to have been immersion.
5. That all ecclesiastical historians, ancient writers, and the most learned Pedobaptists, declare that immersion was the primitive practice.

In proof of my third proposition I demonstrated,
1. From analogy that infant baptism was evil in itself.
2. That it was an act of will-worship.
3. That it carnalized and secularized the church.
4. It deceived the child.
5. It encourages superstition in the parents.
6. It is an effectual means of introducing an ungodly priesthood into the church.
7. That it has generally produced persecution, and thus brought curses upon the state.
8. That all human traditions is the most schismatical, and presents the greatest obstacle to the union of Christians.

Such was the method pursued, and such the items adduced in the proof of the grand topic which I stood pledged to illustrate and maintain. Whether I have redeemed my pledge, whether I have established every point introduced, and fairly met and combated every objection, remains with you, my friends, individually to determine. To the testimony of heaven we would exhort you to bring this and every question; to bring all religious opinions and practices to this test. Whatever is taught in it, practice, and hold fast; whatever is not, reject as unprofitable and vain. And although we have remonstrated against that ostentatious and Pharisaic devotion, which I thought sometimes apparent in my opponent, and which is very current in this age, do not think that, because such ought to be discountenanced, exposed, and contemned, there is no true piety to be cultivated, practised, and exhibited. Far be it, my friends. To fear God and keep his commandments is the whole duty, privilege, honour, and happiness of man. The question you have heard discussed is one of the greatest consequence, when we consider all its bearings and appendages. It is, in my estimation, that very question, which, in so far as it is discussed and correctly determined, is to sap the foundation of reformed popery, and to introduce, not merely an era of general good feelings on scriptural grounds, not merely an exhibition of Christianity friendly to the highest degree of civil liberty and religious freedom, not merely a spirit of free and unbiased inquiry, but an intelligent, inquisitive, harmonious, and devout profession of the true religion. You that believe that the Father of mercies giveth good things unto them that ask him, will ask, will seek, and assuredly find that wisdom, knowledge, and assurance of understanding in the religion of the only wise God, our Saviour, which is more to be desired than all the worldly honour, and fame, and treasure, which the whole race of Adam have in this life obtained. To the records of Heaven then bring all your inquiries; for these alone are able to make you wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus,

END OF THE DEBATE.
THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

“Style no man on earth your father: for he alone is your Father who is in heaven; and all ye are brethren. Assume not the title of rabbi; for ye have only one Teacher: neither assume the title of leader; for ye have only one Leader, the Messiah.”—MESSIAH.

CHRISTIANITY is the perfection of that divine philanthropy which was gradually developing itself for four thousand years. It is the bright effulgence of every divine attribute, mingling and harmonizing, as the different colours in the rainbow, in the bright shining after rain, into one complete system of perfections—the perfection of GLORY to God in the highest heaven, the perfection of PEACE on earth, and the perfection of GOOD WILL among men.

The eyes of patriarchs and prophets, of saints and martyrs, from Adam to John the Baptist, with longing expectation, were looking forward to some glorious age, indistinctly apprehended, but ardently desired. Every messenger sent from heaven, fraught with the communications of the divine Spirit, to illuminate, to reprove, and to correct the patriarchs and the house of Israel, was brightening the prospect and chastening the views of the people, concerning the glory of the COMING AGE. The “FOUNDER OF THE FUTURE AGE,” as one of Israel's prophets calls the Messiah, was exhibited, in the emblems of the prophetic style, as rising, expanding and brightening to view; from the glistening “Star of Jacob,” to the radiating “Sun of Righteousness,” with salutiferous and vivifying rays.

The person, character, and reign of Messiah the Prince, exhausted all the beauties of language, all the grandeur and resplendencies of creation, to give some faint resemblances of them. In adumbrating Emmanuel and his realm, “Nature mingles colours not her own." She mingle? the bright splendours of things celestial, with things terrestrial, and kindly suits the picture to our impaired faculties. She brings the rose of Sharon and the lily of the vales—the mild lustre of the richest gems, and the brighest radiance of the choicest metals. She makes the stars of heaven sparkle in his hand, and the brightness of the sun shine in his face. She causes the mountains to flow down at his presence; his advent to gladden the solitary place; before him the deserts to rejoice and blossom as the rose. To the desert, at his approach, she gives the glory of Lebanon, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon.

Under his peaceful banner and gracious scepter, the wolf dwells with the lamb; the leopard lies down with the kid; the calf, the young lion, and the falling in harmony follow the mandates of a child; the cow and bear feed together; then young ones lie down in concord; and the lion eats straw like the ox. The suckling child plays on the hole of the asp; and the weaned child puts its hand on the cockatrice's den. Under his munificent government the wilderness becomes a fruitful field; and the field once esteemed fruitful is counted for a forest. He makes the eyes of the blind to see; the ears of the deaf to hear; and the tongue of the dumb to speak. The stammerer becomes eloquent, and the wise men of other times become as babes. He brings the captive from the prison, and those that sat in darkness out of the prison house. His people march forth with joy; they are led forth with peace. The mountains and the hills break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field clap their hands.

"He shall judge the poor of the people; he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. They shall fear him as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass; as showers that water the earth. In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace as long as the moon endures. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the end: of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him, and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts, Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him. For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and the needy, and shall save the souls of the needy. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight. There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon: and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth. His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed.” Psalm lxxii. 4—17. Such were the glorious things spoken of Zion and her King, by holy kings and ancient seers, fired with prophetic impulse. These are but a taste of the sweetness which flows in the stream of prophecy, which revived, cheered, and animated the drooping, disconsolate, and afflicted hearts of the righteous ancients. Such things they uttered who saw his glory and spake of him. These prospective views of Messiah and his institution, prepare us to expect the brightest exhibition of glory in himself, and the highest degree of moral excellence and felicity in the subjects of his reign.

The fulness of time is come. Messiah appears. But lo! he has no form nor comeliness. He comes forth as a languishing shoot from a dry and sterile soil. He comes to his own, and his own receive him not. He comes to the people who had the visions of the Almighty, and who heard the prophecies of the Spirit concerning him; yet they reject him as an impostor. They recognize no charms in his person—no glory in his purposed reign. Their hearts are infatuated with worldly notions, and they view him with a prejudiced eye. They see no diadem upon his head—no scepter in his hand. They see no gorgeous apparel upon his person—no nobles nor princes in his train. They hear no sound of the trumpet—no confused sound of mighty warriors preparing for battle. They see no garments rolled in blood, nor captives led in chains. They are offended at the meanness of his parentage; at the humble birth and character of his attendants, and at his own insignificant appearance. His glories, and their views of glory, correspond in no one instance. His glory was that of unparalleled condescension, incomparable humility, meekness, and love. The most resplendent gems in his crown were his abject poverty, his patient endurance of the grossest indignities, and the unreserved devotion of his whole soul, as the righteous servant of Jehovah. His victories were not those of a mighty chieftain, at the head of many thousands, marching through opposing ranks, demolishing citadels, devastation countries, causing iron gates to open at his approach, and leading bound to his triumphal chariot his captive enemies. No! his victories were the conquest of all temptations, of death, and of him that had the power of death. He triumphed over all principalities and powers of darkness, error, and death. In his death and resurrection he gained the greatest conquest ever won; he vanquished death and the grave; he obtained eternal redemption; he opened the gates of Paradise, and procured an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, for all them that look for deliverance. Such were the personal achievements of the Captain of our salvation.

The precepts of his institution correspond with his appearance and deportment among men. He inculcates a morality pure as himself, and such as must render his disciples superior to all the world besides. He gives no scope to any malignant passions, and checks every principle that would lead to war, oppression, or cruelty. His precepts respect not merely the overt act, but the principles from which all overt acts of wickedness proceed. Ambition, pride, avarice, lust, malevolence, are denounced as really criminal, as the actions to which they give rise. His precepts are no dry, lifeless systems of morality, to be forced upon his disciples, or to be worn as an outside garment; but they are inculcated by arguments and considerations which when apprehended, engrave them upon the heart, and render them of easy practice. The reason, the nature, and the import of his death, afford to those who understand it, an argument that gives life and vigour to all his precepts, and that makes his yoke easy and his burthen light.

When we turn our attention to the character and exploits of his first disciples, his ambassadors to the world, what an illustrious exhibition of the excellency of his doctrine, and of the purity of his morals do they afford! In them, how conspicuous faith, hope, and love! What zeal, what patience, what self-denial, what deadness to the world! How gladly they spend and are spent in the good work of faith, labour of love, and patience of hope! They glory in reproaches, in privations, in stripes, in imprisonments, in all manner of sufferings; yea, in death itself, for the Son of man's sake. How freely, how cheerfully, how laboriously they performed the ministry which they had received! They look for no applause, for no stipend, no fixed salary, no lucrative office, no honourable title among men. They have continually in their eye the example of their Chief,” looking off from the ancients to JESUS, the Captain and Finisher of the faith, who, for the joy set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and sat down on the right hand of God.” Amidst their enemies and false friends, how calm, how meek, how prudent, how resolute, how persevering! They exhibit virtues, in comparison of which, the virtues of all other religionists appear either as splendid sins, or as meager empty names. Such was the character of the ambassadors and subordinate ministers of the new institution.

The societies called churches, constituted and set in order by those ministers of the New Testament, were of such as received and acknowledged JESUS as Lord Messiah, the Saviour of the world, and had put themselves under his guidance. The ONLY BOND OF UNION among them was faith in him and submission to his will. No subscription to abstract propositions framed by synods; no decrees of councils sanctioned by kings; no rules of practice commanded by ecclesiastical courts were imposed on them as terms of admission into, or of continuance in this holy brotherhood. In the “apostles' doctrine” and in the “apostles' commandments” they steadfastly continued. Their fraternity was a fraternity of love, peace, gratitude, cheerfulness, joy, charity, and universal benevolence. Their religion did not manifest itself in public fasts nor carnivals. They had no festivals--no great and solemn meetings. Their meetings on the first day of the week was at all times alike, solemn, joyful, and interesting. Their religion was not of that elastic and porous kind, which at one time is compressed into some cold formalities, and at another expanded into prodigious zeal and warmth. No—their piety did not at one time rise to paroxisms, isms, and their zeal to effervescence, and by and by, languish into frigid ceremony and lifeless form. It was the pure, clear, and swelling current of love to God, of love to man, expressed in all the variety of doing good.

It did not vary with moons and seasons. It did not change as dress, nor fluctuate as the manners of the times. Their devotion did not diversify itself into the endless forms of modern times. They had no monthly concerts for prayer; no solemn convocations, no great fasts, nor preparation, nor thanksgiving days. Their churches were not fractured into missionary societies, bible societies, education societies; nor did they dream of organizing such in the world. The head of a believing household was not in those days a president or manager of a board of foreign missions; his wife, the president of some female education society; his eldest son, the recording secretary of some domestic bible society; his eldest daughter, the corresponding secretary of a mite society; his servant maid, the vice-president of a rag society; and his little daughter, a tutoress of a Sunday school. They knew nothing of the hobbies of modern times. In their church capacity alone they moved. They neither transformed themselves into any other kind of association, nor did they fracture and sever themselves into divers societies. They viewed the church of Jesus Christ as the scheme of heaven to ameliorate the world: as members of it, they considered themselves bound to do all they could for the glory of God and the good of men. They dare not transfer to a missionary society, or bible society, or education society, a cent or a prayer, lest in so doing they should rob the church of its glory, and exalt the inventions of men above the wisdom of God. In their church capacity alone they moved. The church they considered “the pillar and ground of the truth;” they viewed it as the temple of the Holy Spirit; as the house of the living God. They considered if they did all they could in this capacity, they had nothing left for any other object of a religious nature. In this capacity, wide as its sphere extended, they exhibited the truth in word and deed. Their good works which accompanied salvation, were the labours of love in ministering to the necessities of saints, to the poor of the brotherhood. They did good to all men, but especially to the household of faith. They practised that pure and undefiled religion, which in overt acts consists in “taking care of orphans and widows in their affliction, and in keeping one's self unspotted by (the vices of) the world.”

In their church capacity they attended upon every thing that was of a social character, that did not belong to the closet or fireside. In the church, in all their meetings, they offered up their joint petitions for all things lawful, commanded, or promised. They left nothing for a missionary prayer meeting, for meetings of unusual solemnity or interest. They did not at one time abate their zeal, their devotion, their gratitude, or their liberality, that they might have an opportunity of showing forth to advantage, or of doing something of great consequence at another. Such things they condemned in Jews and Pagans. No, gentle reader, in the primitive church they had no Easter Sunday, Thanksgiving Monday, Shrove Tuesday, Ash Wednesday, Holy Thursday, Good Friday, nor Preparation Saturday. All days were alike good—alike preparation—alike thanksgiving. As soon as some Pharisees that believed, began to observe days, and months, and times, and years; so soon did the apostle begin to stand in doubt of them.

Having taken a cursory view of some of the leading features of the Christian religion, exhibited in prospective, and in actual existence at its first institution, we shall in the last place advert to its present appearance. But alas! “how is the fine gold become dim!” Instead of the apostles’ doctrine, simply and plainly exhibited in the New Testament, we have got the sublime science of theology, subdivided into scholastic, polemic, dogmatic, and practical divinity. Instead of the form of sound words given by the Spirit to be held fast, we have countless creeds, composed of terms and phrases, dogmas and speculations, invented by whimsical metaphysicians, Christian philosophers, rabbinical doctors, and enthusiastic preachers. Instead of the divinely established order of bishops and deacons, which remained when the age of “spiritual gifts” and “spiritual men” passed away, we have popes, cardinals, archbishops, metropolitan bishops, diocesan bishops, rectors, prebendaries, deans, priests, ruling elders, circuit preachers, local preachers, licentiates, class leaders, abbots, monks, friars, &c. &c.

Our devotion exhibits itself in prayers, in the set phrase of pompous oratory; in singing choirs; in long sermons, modelled after Grecian and Roman orations, logical themes and metaphysical essays; in revivals, camp-meetings praying societies, theological schools, education societies, missionary societies, Sunday schools, and in raising largo sums of money by every way that ingenuity can devise, for propagating the gospel.
Our zeal burns brightest in contending for orthodox tenets, and a sort of technical language rendered sacred, and of imposing influence by long prescription. Such as the covenant of works, the covenant of grace; the active and passive obedience of Christ; legal repentance; the terms and conditions of the gospel; the gospel offer; the holy sacraments; ministerial, sacramental, and catholic communion; the mediatorial kingdom of Christ; the millennium; historic faith, temporary faith, the faith of miracles, justifying faith, the faith of devils, the faith of assurance, and the assurance of faith; the direct act of faith, the reflex act of faith; baptismal vows; kirk sessions; fencing the tables; metallic tokens, &c. &c. Thus, to speak in clerical dignity, anagogically, more than half the language of Ashdod is mingled with less than half the language of Canaan; and the people are generally zealous about such confounding, misleading, and arrogant distinctions, which all result in divesting Christianity of its glorious simplicity, which adapts it to boys and girls, as well as to philosophers, and which distorts it into a mystery fit to employ linguists, philosophers, doctors of divinity, all their leisure hours, at a handsome sum per annum, in studying, and then in giving publicity to their own discoveries, or in retailing those of others.

But into how diverse and opposite extremes and absurdities have many run, in their wild, superstitious, and chimerical views of the Christian religion? Inquisitive reader, turn your eyes to yonder monastery, built in that solitary desert, filled with a religious order of monks, and an abbot at their head. Why have they shut themselves out from the world in that solitary recluse? It is for the purpose of becoming more abstemious, more devout, more devoted to the study of mystic theology. Hoar them contending whether the Solitaires, the Coeuabites, or the Sarabaïtes have chosen the course most congenial to the gospel. See these poor, gloomy, lazy set of mortals, habited in their awful black, their innocent white, or their spiritual grey, according to their order, forsaking all the business and enjoyments of society, spending their days in penury avid affliction, for the sake of sublimer contemplations of God and of the heavenly world; and say, have they ever seen a Bible? Again, see this sacred gloom, this holy melancholy, this pious indolence, becoming so popular as to affect all the seminaries of Christendom for a time! See it command the respect of the highest dignitaries of the church; and hear them call those haunts of gloom and superstition, as some of the reformed orders of modern times call our colleges, “fountains and streams that make glad the city of God” by qualifying pious divines! Yes, these monasteries became so famous for piety and solemnity, that the church looked to them for her most useful ministers. And, indeed, much of the gloomy aspect, dejected appearance, and holy sighing of modern times, and especially of the leaders of devotion, sprang from those monasteries.

Next, consider for a moment, yon sobbing anchorite, with his amulet round his neck, his beads solemnly moving through his fingers, bent upon his naked knees, in you miserable cell, muttering his “Ave Maria,” and invoking St. Andrew to intercede in his behalf; and say, has he a Bible? O yes! It lies mouldering and moth eaten on his shelves!

From this scene of infatuation turn your eyes to yonder dismal edifice, with iron gates and massy bars. Within its merciless apartments view the “minister of religion,” the “ambassador of Christ,” attired in his sacred robes, with holy aspect and flaming zeal for “divine honour” and that of his church, exhorting the vile heretic on pain of the most excruciating torment here, and eternal damnation hereafter, to abjure his heresy. As an argument to enforce his pious exhortations, observe the redhot pincers in his hand, pointing to the boiling lead, the piles of fagots, the torturing wheels, and all the various engines of horrid vengeance. Do you ask who is he? I answer, It is the Reverend Inquisitor. On the most solemn AUTO DA FE, see this incorrigible heretic brought forward, arrayed in his santo benito, or sleeveless yellow coat, flowered to the border with the resemblance of (lames, of red serge, decorated with his own picture, surrounded with devils, as doomed to destruction for the good of his soul. Then declare of what use is reason or revelation to many called Christians!

But leaving the dungeon and that quarter of the globe, visit the group of reformed Christians, and see another order of “teachers of the Christian faith,” “ministers of religion, ’ having prepared themselves by the study of Grecian ami Roman languages, laws, history, fables, gods, goddesses, debaucheries, wars, and suicides; having studied triangles, squares, circles, and ellipses, algebra and fluxions, the mechanical powers, chemistry, natural philosophy, &c, &c, for the purpose of becoming teachers of the Christian religion; and then going forth with their saddlebags full of scholastic divinity in quest of a call to some eligible living; then ask again, Where is the Bible?

And, stranger still, see that Christian general, with his ten thousand soldiers, and his chaplain at his elbow, preaching, as he says, the gospel of good will among men; and hear him exhort his general and his Christian warriors to go forth with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other, to fight the battles of God and their country; praying that the Lord would cause them to fight valiantly, and render their efforts successful in making as many widows and orphans as will afford sufficient opportunity for others to manifest the purity of their religion by taking care of them! If any thing is wanting to finish a picture of the most glaring inconsistencies, add to this those Christians who are daily extolling the blessings of civil and religious liberty, and at the same time, by a system of the most cruel oppression, separating a wife from the embraces of her husband, and the mother from her tender offspring; violating every principle, and rending every tie that endears life, and reconciles man to his lot; and that, forsooth, because “might gives right,” and a man is held guilty because his skin is a shade darker than the standard colour of the times. Adverting to these signs of the times, and many others to which these reflections necessarily lead, will you not say that this prophecy is now fulfilled—2 Tim. iv. 3, 4—“There will be a time when they will not endure wholesome teaching; but having itching ears, they will, according to their own lusts, heap up to themselves teachers. And from the truth, indeed, they will turn away their ears, and be turned aside to fables.” Chap. iii. 1—5, “This also know, that in latter days, perilous times will come. For men will be self-lovers, money-lovers, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, ungrateful, unholy, without natural affection, covenant-breakers, slanderers, having a form of godliness, but denying the power of it. Now FROM THESE TURN AWAY.” Christian reader, remember this command—and from such turn away.”

THE END.
